PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE FULL REPORT

ADDRESS BY MR. McFADYEN. FISHERIES.

Mr. A. J. McFadyen, introducing the subject of fisheries, spoke as follows: I think the Government has been wise, at least at this time, to call this Conference, and they have every reason to congratulate themselves on having assembled together the people of intelligence of the Island. Many of us who have no hand in making the laws for the place imagine we could do a good deal better than those who are at it.

I have been asked to say a few words in reference to Fisheries. You know, gentlemen, that we have a large, extensive fishery, and I may say at the outset that although agriculture is called the premier industry, I claim the first place for the fisheries, and I will tell you why. Your fishermen can go to work and obtain his revenue with very little expenditure, and without waiting for a harvest. He has not the trouble of cultivating the soil and sowing his seed and waiting for its germination, and then caring for it until the time of harvest. He takes his line, goes out, and immediately he has his revenue. This is one reason why I say it is the first of our natural industries.

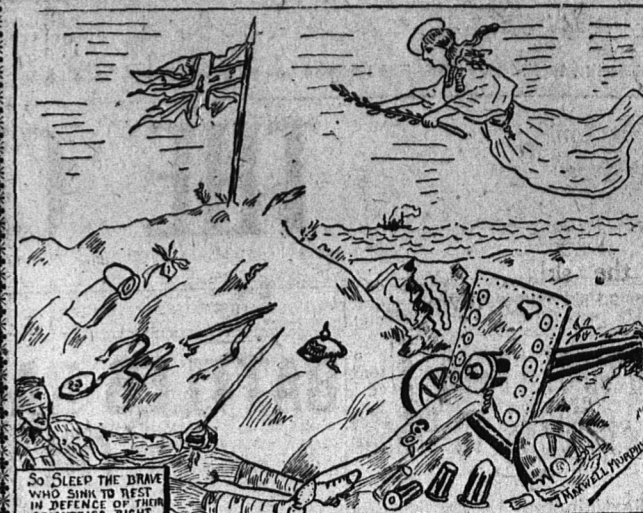

The fisheries of the world, amalgamated, amount to the large sum of 430 millions of dollars. Of this sum the United Kingdom contributes about seventy millions; the United States comes next, neck and neck, with seventy millions; and Canada, with her eighty millions of people, contributes thirty million to the world's catch. Now this on the face of it would indicate that Canada is doing her share or as much as we could reasonably be expected of her, with her eight million of people; but we must take into consideration her extensive fishing territory—on the Pacific, from Alaska to the Northern boundary of the United States, and on the Atlantic, starting in the Bay of Fundy and going around the coast clean to the North Pole; and she has in addition her rivers and great lakes; so that hers is beyond the fishery of any other country in the world. We come to our little province, which The Almighty, in his wisdom, cut adrift from the mainland and anchored on a fishing ground. The fishermen has no need to go off any distance. All he has to do is to move off the shore and he is immediately on the fishing ground. Notwithstanding that, all that we are contributing towards this enormous amount of the world's production is one million and less than a quarter. That is a very small sum. I may say that in 1889 our bounty paid to deep sea fishermen was paid to 3,900, a little less than 4,000. Of late years we have been paying bounty to less than half. Since that time our fisheries have lost half their population. Again, our population has been drained to go to the defence of our country. In a little while two thousand of the cream of our men will have left us, and that will leave us in a pretty bad shape so far as the development of our fisheries is concerned. Those who employ labour in that industry find it very difficult this spring to obtain the necessary help to conduct their business, and I hardly know what the result may be if that goes on. We are all endeavouring to substitute that labour by female help and expect to succeed to some extent, but there are some portions of the work that cannot be undertaken by females, and it is imperative that a great industry like this should have the necessary labour; so that I think it is up to the Government of this country and of Canada to see that fishermen be encouraged to come to the province. We can replace these two thousand men we have lost, and add another two thousand. I will say that the industry is one that is not going to bring people here to be a burden in the country; it is not going to bring a population in that, when they come here, will seek help from the Government, that will ask the Government to help them out to start in business and assist them in supporting their families. To illustrate this I will just mention a little plot in our neighbourhood, where there is a fleet of some 25 boats. These boats are manned with two men to the boat, sometimes a man and a boy. They handle about a thousand hooks on what they call a trawl. That word "trawl" may be confusing to some. "Trawling" to the Englishman is the beam trawler of the North Sea; to the Scotchman, means trawling for fish, drifting with nets and lines through the water; but "trawl", as we understand it in America, is a long line stretched out with hooks at intervals of two or three feet. These boats are supplied with these lines, having about a thousand to fifteen hundred hooks. I will show you what these men did, with an investment for boat and gear not exceeding $100. In 1907 from June 8 to August 8 the first crew made $213.22; the second, $210.20; third, $350; fourth $268.66; and fifth, $186. In 1915 the first one made $337.66; the second $416.81; and the next $351.66. These were the returns for two months cod fishing. I think, when you consider the investment is only $100, we have no business, agriculture or even the fox industry, that can beat that—200 per cent. in two months. It is safe to say that a population brought here for that industry is not going to be a burden on the country. These few men I have mentioned devote their time and attention to fishing; they are not farmers. They spend their whole time on the beach and they have their reward. They have not many of the luxuries of life, but they have every comfort and live as well as I do and probably in a healthier and more wholesome atmosphere. I think I have made it pretty clear that immigration would be a benefit to this industry and should be encouraged. We have an industry here waiting to be developed, waiting for fishermen to come and take the wealth that is at our doors. One unfortunate thing about this fishing business is the suspicion attending the fishermen's account. The merchants look upon him with a great deal of suspicion. If he goes to the bank they almost turn him out of doors, and he is not encouraged to the extent he should be. Now, if we could bring to our shores a new lot of fishermen, I think it would be up to the merchants or leading men of the province to give them the right hand of fellowship and encourage them by trusting them. I know of no man acquaintance whom I would rather trust than this very man. He is honest, upright, true, industrious, a man deserving of every confidence; and if we brought strangers from the North Sea, from the British Isles, we could find them a very desirable class of citizens. Their very calling draws them close to the Maker. They are out in His open air, dealing with things of nature, battling with the elements, and why should not they be honest and upright? They are, and I hope we will have the privilege of bringing a lot and them to our shores—not in hundreds, but thousands. We have room a round our shores for four or five thousand of these fishermen if we can get them.

There is very much that can be said on the subject of fishing. There is the question of apparatus and the question of treaties, and again, there is that of laws; and here I might say that meetings in the interests of agriculture are held throughout the country—if a hen is going to lay an egg there is somebody looking after it. When has anyone heard of a fisherman's meeting being called by the Government? This is something that should be looked into. These men have a right to education as much as any other men, and I say more. There is another point: Canada is a maritime nation; there is no mistaking it. She is bound to have a Navy, and the supplying of that navy—as you will find in the case in every country in the world—will come from the fisheries; so that if we can build up our fisheries we will have the nucleus of our Navy, and men to man our ships.
