AIR RIFLE CONFISCATED—A young girl was shot on the hand while enroute to college yesterday morning on her bicycle. The accident occurred on Alley Street. City Police were notified and started an investigation at once. The pellet, which hit the girl, was shot from a .22 calibre rifle. The rifle, which proved to be very painful, was in the neighborhood unearched such a weapon which was owned by a young boy. It was confiscated and the owner severely reprimanded. Constables Gordon, Peck and Peter Walsh conducted the investigation.

THEFT OF AUTO TIRES—Two tires which had been stolen from an ice house on Upper Queen Street, recently, were returned to the owner yesterday as a result of investigation by Constables Gordon Peck and Peter Walsh of the City Police Force. One taken from the building by some boys and was located on Elm Avenue Wednesday evening. The other was found yesterday where it had been hidden behind one of the walls of the ice house, presumably to be removed later.

"When Air Raids Strike"

MARCH OF TIME'S LATEST ISSUE WILL WAKE UP OUR PEOPLE!

In their latest film entitled "When Air Raids Strike," the Editors of the March of Time bring to the screen the story of one of the greatest feats of organization in modern times—the Air Raid Precautions (ARP) system of Great Britain.

The film shows how citizens on this side of the water are also adjusting themselves to the imminence of danger from air attack; are learning that total war demands of civilians the same discipline and alertness as that required of the military forces. From Britain's hard and bitter experience in educating her people to defend themselves during air attack, the March of Time shows, America, including Canada, is learning many valuable lessons.

"When Air Raids Strike" shows, first of all, the standard protective military devices in action during an air attack—super-sensitive plane detectors; barrage balloons which force enemy bombers to fly high; squadrons of fighter planes; and rings of anti-aircraft batteries around important cities and industrial areas. Back of these defenses, the film shows, must be a trained and disciplined civilian army centering around Air Raid Wardens, who are responsible for the protection of human life, and Auxiliary Fire Fighters charged with the task of maintaining property damage.

In one particularly important sequence, the March of Time shows exactly how to extinguish an incendiary bomb—one of the worst menaces of all, yet one of the easiest to fight if proper counter-measures are employed. The March of Time outlines the tremendous program of public education which has been necessary in England and shows how hundreds of movie "shorts" produced by the Ministry of Public Information have helped Britons to correct the flaws in their defense system.

The Wade Kidnap Case

By Leslie Cargill

Mr. Wickings, rural postman for all that scattered district around Epworth, carefully propped his bicycle outside the main gate of Fairclough, wishing with all his heart that the great house was graced with a lodge as were some of the other drive-equipped residences on his round.

Walking was not his idea of an enjoyable pastime. Many years of cycling had killed his liking for pedestrianism. In his early days the postal authorities used to insist on the whole journey being done on foot. Since they relaxed, in the interests of speed and a friendly consideration for delivery men, he had eliminated as much of the walking as possible.

For some reason best known to himself, however, he invariably completed the final stages on foot, even when there were long and well kept drives. Somehow, it did not seem right to him to ride on private carriage ways.

It seemed no reason why the luxurious car which drove up almost simultaneously shouldn't have swept right up to the front door. Queerly enough he had seen it several times before and the self-same chauffeur in uniform had followed him to deliver a message at the house.

So he gave you a letter for Fairclough, I'll pop it in along with these here others," he offered. "I can see to it myself, gran'ad," the man retorted.

Wickings was aggrieved. "There ain't no reason for you to be rude, just 'cause of that grand uniform," he grumbled. "Mine mayn't be as neat, but I ain't ashamed of it."

"Better get on with your job, and leave me to mine."

MEETING THE PURSUIT

It was one of those foolish episodes that occasionally upset carefree plans. Instead of hurrying up the path Mr. Wickings stood stock still, scowling ferociously. He wanted badly to argue things out with this upstart who became so pleasant and friendly after the chauffeur was determined not to be the first to reach the letter box.

Between them they had arrived at an impasse. So concerned were they with their own affairs that no notice was taken of a suddenly drawn blind at an upstairs window. At this pre-arranged signal Smith was to bring the car leisurely from the garage so that Mosson and Broome could get off in pursuit of the moment the man turned his back.

Smith had got rather tired of waiting for something to happen, and when he noticed the blind he acted so promptly that the stranger and Mr. Wickings had only just managed to avoid a stalemate. They were walking together when the car halted at the door.

Everybody was taken by surprise. The postman thrust his offering into Mosson's hand as he stood on the threshold and the chauffeur did not seem able to make up his mind.

"Message for Mr. Broome," he said sharply. "No answer. Turning abruptly he began to stride away. Whether he was suspicious or not from that moment was impossible to decide. Certainly he was stepping out briskly and once he turned to look over his shoulder he might have been an apprehensive manner.

Broome was automatically tearing open the envelope when the Major almost pushed him into the waiting car. "Read it on the way," he snapped. "Too late to pretend were strangers on the road. That fellow must have taken in the appearance of this bus so he'll be sure to come over here following."

"What do we do then?" "Carry on as far as possible. If the worst comes to the worst and he leads us a dance, there'll be nothing for it but to pick him up and trust to his spilling something worth hearing."

Smith received his orders as calmly as though told to proceed to the village store. He was to keep the other car at sight, and all cars, without appearing to be following, if possible.

Another powerful looking car was busied with a few parcels down the drive as they emerged slowly from the clamber inside and, a second later, the other car shot away at high speed. By the look of it they were going to be given a good run.

Meanwhile Broome was skimming over the letter which was considerably longer than any of the others. It began with a reference to failure to adhere strictly to instructions.

"I regret the delay in cashing the cheque and also that you appear to be taking it upon yourself to question my actions. Please be assured that I object to any interference whatever with my arrangements."

"That is a hint that it is known the police have been called in," Broome commented. "Take careful note of further instructions," Broome read on. "You will pass a note in the smallest possible parcel, and take this with you by car to Reigate station arriving outside the entrance at midday on Saturday. There my messenger will approach. Follow him as he directs. He will take you to where I am staying. Kindly note I require implicit obedience. Come alone and treat this as strictly personal and confidential. T. W."

"Every word, sir. Not at all the letter Sir Timothy is in the habit of writing. Too peremptory. Leaves no shadow of doubt that there's underhand work going on, even if we hadn't reached that conclusion." "Ah, but we had!" Mosson held out his hand for the envelope. Looking at the stamp automatically, he whistled in surprise. "There's nothing wrong with it at first glance, the stamp being surrounded by simple margins and the cancellation mark being a sign of having been tampered with."

"Most peculiar," he said. "Considering this was handed to you in person, we know it didn't reach you through the post. Evidently they'd tampered with the doubtful nature of their previous method, and tried a new one this time." Broome was puzzled, failing to appreciate the implications. "You see," Mosson said patiently, "how anxious they are to keep everything seemingly above board. This is a cleverer trick still." "How do you mean?" "An address written in pencil and sent through the post. Or else the first writing in ink was chemically removed and a fresh superscription added. Our experts at The Yard will soon confirm that by testing the paper. After all, it is only a variation on a familiar theme."

"You never can tell. Slenderer clues than this have sent me to rack now. Where in the world is that fellow leading us?" A short whistle indicated that Smith had something to communi-

SAVE HAIRPINS, PINS, NEEDLES

Needles and pins. Pins and needles. They are made of steel and steel means ships and tanks, shells and guns, so the time may come when there is a shortage of them in Canada. The time may come when there is no very evident shortage now, the fact that many beautiful parlours in eastern Canada are asking their patrons to bring their own hairpins with them—points to a reduction in available supplies. "Save hairpins, needles, curlers and metal fastenings—treasure them for the time they come when women will rue the day they threw them out." This is the advice of a British visitor who knows what real shortage means. "Grove" on the bedroom floor to collect that dropped bobby pin? Examine the contents of the dust pan for stray pins; keep needles where they will not rust and clean those already rusted with emery cloth or powder. Don't throw away fastenings along with old clothing and take zippers from worn-out handbags and tobacco pouches," he said.
