THE LOVE PENDULUM

BY MARION RUBINCAM

THE CHANGE

Chapter 44

One last little incident transpired to make the final days in the city bitter. Shirley, my little lisping friend, was in to see me. I was packing books ready to ship to the country place.

"I think you're very brave going to a tiny place in the country," she said. "Gwen thaid the only way to leave it to make more, not to spend less."

"You're very withe, Conthanth," Shirley remarked, pulling her sables around her as she rose to leave. "May I come down for week end party?"

"All the week end parties you want, I'd love to have you. 'I'll make you do the dusting.'"

"What fun! I never duthed. Fantasy our Connie being her own cook and maid!"

But Shirley never came after all, not that summer. She did the unexpected, she was always doing the unexpected. She ran away with her father's chauffeur three weeks after we had moved and the papers were full of the new "romance." Her father accepted it with as good grace as possible, put the man into his bank and bought there a very stunning house at the seashore. And the next time I saw Shirley she had forgotten her lip in the more serious interest—a very small infant son.

"Our last night, here," I said with a little sigh when Win came home at dinner time. "Oh, Win, I'm so tired. But the trunks have gone and the boxes and tomorrow—tomorrow you'll come home to a dinner that I shall cook and a wee little place in the country."

"Well, let's make a night of it now, since tomorrow we go to jail," Win answered. "Now don't look as though I'd slapped you, silly child. I shant mind the country when I get there. But do let's have a nice time tonight. Did you save out a dress to wear?"

I nodded. But I had promised to go see Mrs. Anderson and the baby Connie, and not all Win's persuasion would keep me away.

"The baby hasn't been well and I must see her before I leave," I told him. "Do come along!"

"Now what on earth do I want to see a washerwoman's baby for?" he demanded. "If you feel your happiness will be eternally ruined otherwise, you go. Take a taxi and make it wait for you, and join me—I'll be at Gwen's. We'll wait for you there."

At Gwen's! Of course, it was always at Gwen's. But I was anxious to see the baby again, so I went.

"And it's the country will put roses back in your cheeks again," Mrs. Anderson told me.

"I wish I could take Connie along it would put roses in her cheeks, too," I said, looking at the tiny thing wistfully. I wanted to pick her up in my arms and carry her off with me.

But I did not dare.

And again I felt, as I drove up to Gwen's, that in the little East Side flat I had touched real life.

Use olive oil and have hair with lovely gloss

Hair cannot have light and color if it is left dry and brittle. Hair specialists all agree that it must be shampooed with olive oil, which cleans but never leaves hair dry and dull.

Now thousands and thousands of women enjoy the finest of olive oil shampoos, economically at home. They use PALMOLIVE SHAMPOO—olive oil in its most convenient form. Washes away all dirt and grime; removes dandruff. And it leaves hair with rich life and gloss.

Get a bottle today at any department or drug store. Just one shampoo will amaze you. Try it, and see.

and that I was going to a world of sham and tinsel and biting remarks.

I went into Gwen's drawing room it was early for her crowd. It was only ten, and at ten, they were rising from the cigarettes and liquors that followed dinner, to begin the evening's festivities.

Her butler announced my name. I saw Win start, suddenly, almost guiltily, jump back. Gwen was near him very near him. She turned to greet me with superb ease and assurance.

"Well, here at last, dear little angel of charity! Win has been telling me about your wash lady protege. So sweet of you to take an interest in these things!" Her greenish eyes glistened amusement as she looked at me.

"How white you are! It's good you are going to some quiet place to rest. Win hasn't been taking care of you I'm afraid." Her voice crooned as she turned to smile at Winthrop. "Another cigarette, Win?"

No, Connie, I shant allow you, you know you don't really like them. Well, if you must." She held a lighted match. "Have you heard the newest? That odious Sir Charles that Mrs. Marsden has been trotting about, has been making violent love to all our young girls, you know. Well, last evening, it appears little Mary Marsden—"

She went on with the story to the sting at its end. I answered with another bit of scandal, Shirley had told me, and Win had yet another he had heard down town.

And so it went. And when we joined other people that evening it was easy to smoke and dance and sit about talking gossip.

"Look at them," one man remarked, pointing to Win and Gwen as they danced. "Couldn't get much closer, could they? Good thing his wife's taking him away—where is it, some farm in the desert?"

It was four in the morning when we were in the taxi going home. I was ill and weak and dizzy. I wanted nothing better than to put my head down on Win's shoulder and sleep. But Win, sitting hunched up in his corner of the taxi, was sleepy and cross.

But the next afternoon I was already in the little house in the country. And I thought then that perhaps all my troubles would be over. Perhaps—

Tomorrow—A Different Life

ELECTRICITY BAD FOR THE NERVES

PARIS, August 6.—Electricity is bad for the health, according to Professor Charles Nordmann, of the University of Paris. Inhabitants of cities like New York and Paris, where the development of electricity for transportation and lighting has been enormous in the last twenty years, are more exposed to nervous diseases than people living in little towns were oil and gas still all the essential needs.

Professor Nordmann bases his belief on the fact that the human body is one of the most efficient conductors of electricity. Every manifestation of electric energy has therefore an echo on the human organism. Every time there is a variation in an electric current, that is to say, every time we telephone, or send a telegram or start a street car or light an electric lamp we start a series of counter-currents in our bodies.

"Electric currents," writes Professor Nordmann, "have varied effects on the nerves, on the muscles, on our thoughts. Sometimes they may produce sleep, sometimes vertigo, at other times neuralgia. These effects are dependent on the strength of the current and its duration. Dwellers in cities are more or less 'electrocuted,' according to the length of time they have lived there."

MINARD'S "KING OF PAIN" LINIMENT

A Tip for Canadians Visiting England

(By Dominion News Service) LONDON, Aug. 5.—Entering one of London's prominent restaurants I was bumped into by an individual whose one object was, it would seem, to leave that restaurant as quickly as possible. He grunted, looked up, turned, grasped me by the arm, and led me back into the rotunda. Forcing me down into a big leather-covered chair he drew up another, and having covered his breath shouted:

"Will you for the love of Mike tell prominent citizens of Canada who are planning a trip to England that the fact that Canada stretches from the Atlantic to the Pacific is no longer a startling statement to present to a British audience."

Of course, it was George, and George as usual had a grouch. George is one of those unfortunate individuals who was born on the wrong side of the morning, as they say in Ballyderah, and has never been satisfied with things as they are.

"Another case of 'Why state the obvious,'" I said. It is always best to agree with George. "But why this outburst?"

"Why?" said George. "Why? because I have been at six public functions since I arrived in England and at each of them a Canadian has spoken, and if he did not tell the world that Canada was bounded on the east by the Atlantic and on the west by the Pacific he made the more brilliant observation that the great Dominion was bounded on the west by the Pacific and on the east by the Atlantic."

"When I get back to Canada the first thing I am going to do is to write a little pamphlet for the benefit of prominent Canadians visiting England entitled 'What Not to Say about Canada.' This I am going to have distributed free, gratis and for nothing at the first-class gangway of every ship leaving for England, and some say the people of England in their gratitude will erect a statue to me on the point of land in Canada nearest the Mother country."

"Why do the reporters lay down their pencils and devote themselves to the gossip of Fleet Street when the Canadian speaker of the evening rises? Why do you see a procession of guests, rather shamefaced quietly leave their seats when Mr. Whoosit, M. P., from some Canadian city is called on by the toast master?"

"I'll bite, why?" I asked.

"Why?" George stormed. "because they know that they are going to hear a speech compiled from the book—'5000 facts about Canada.' Because they know they are going to hear nothing but a series of platitudes that will sound like an editorial in the Morning Post of ten years ago. Because they know they are going to hear a speech that will lack pep, punch, personality, individuality, originality, humour or oratorical ability."

"If some homely individual would only rise to his feet and after stating that he was unaccustomed etc. would tell in simple words the story of life in Canada as it actually is, illustrating his points with anecdotes containing real Canadian humor, he would be the hit of the evening. The English people refuse to be impressed by such stale facts as the mileage of Canadian railways, the quantity of wheat produced, the capacity of the grain elevators at the head of the lakes, or the tonnage that annually passes through the sluice of Sault Ste. Marie canal."

"Personally," George said, rising and turning his face toward the corridor where a sign indicated "American Bar." "I'm finished. Wherever I receive an invitation to a dinner at which a Canadian is going to speak my R. S. V. P. is going to be N. O. Y. L. which being translated means 'Not on your life.'" hardly bid them be gone if she still lacks people.

Hence, Mr. Hughes argues in an article in the Sydney Telegraph, it behooves Australia today to redouble her efforts to fill her vacant spaces with men and women of the white race.

Ghost Portrait On a Wall

OXFORD, England, Aug. 5.—The face of Dean Liddell, who died more than twenty-five years ago, is gradually appearing on the east wall of Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford.

The mortar and cement in the wall are drying up with age in such a way as to leave a white patch of cement the size of a man's head standing out from the darker colouring of the wall.

This patch has now assumed the exact face and features of the famous dean. The face appears in profile. The chin, nose, and head of the dean with the bald crown on the head and the curly white hair below it are clearly formed on the wall. It is expected that as the mortar and cement continue to dry up the face will disappear.

The phenomenon becomes all the more strange because it has appeared just below the memorial window which was set up to the dean. The head in the wall is facing towards his wife's tablet, which is engraved in Latin. "Farewell, sweetest and dearest, farewell."

Mr. W. Francis, the dean's verger at Christ Church Cathedral, is keenly interested. "One does not like to put this down to anything occult," he said "but the appearance of the dean's face by his wife's memorial tablet is certainly an extraordinary matter. It has been gradually appearing for the last two years."

Two explanations of the phenomenon have been offered. The first is the easy solution of coincidence. Damp stains coming through the plaster of the wall have formed the head and facial outline of the dean say the people who hold this theory, but it is remarkable that the stains should trace the portrait of Dean Liddell on the wall immediately below a window dedicated to his memory.

How You Can Make Hairs Quickly Disappear

(Helps to Beauty) Even a stubborn growth of hair will quickly vanish from the face, neck or arms after a single treatment with delatone. To remove hair from arms, neck or face make a stiff paste with a little powdered delatone and water, apply to hairy surface and after about two minutes rub off, wash the skin and it will be left free from hair or blemish. To avoid disappointment, be quite certain you get real delatone and mix fresh as wanted.
