Monthly Meeting Of Summerside Town Council

The regular monthly meeting of the Summerside Town Council was held yesterday evening with the Mayor in the chair and Councillors Morrison, McNeill and Morrison present. The town bills were reported as follows: Paid bills $1,414.57; Unpaid bills — $1,028.88; A.R.P. Unpaid bills — $478.18; Electric Light; Paid bills — $1,191.99; Electric Light; Unpaid bills — $1,621.21. In reference to the amount for A.R.P. bills it was stated the town had made a grant of $200 and it was expected the Provincial A.R.P. Committee would pay a portion.

Councillor Morrison reported he and the Mayor had interviewed the Telephone Co. officials with reference to turning in the alarm of the fire at Holman's wharf last month. He said there seemed to be a difference of opinion as to the time that elapsed between the reporting of the fire and the alarm.

They are likely to be attracted by dead fishes along the shore. Vultures are seen in the air a great deal on windy days or on days when strong sunshine creates a rising column of air, the turkey vulture being especially adept at soaring.

CROWS

Crows need no description. Two of them, the upland crow and the fish crow, visit the Atlantic coast in large numbers, but they are not readily distinguished by the inexperienced. The upland crow (Corvus brachyrhynchos), of almost continental range, averages somewhat larger than the coastal fish crow, however, and appears of sturdier build, particularly as to the chest, neck and beak. It is more accustomed to long flights and as a rule goes directly on its way with steady, sweeping wing-beats. Its cry is hoarse and guttural. The fish crow (C. castrifragus) has a more vacillating flight and a higher-pitched and nasal cry. It resides on the coast and the estuaries of large streams, where the upland crow usually is only a visitor, and occurs regularly from the southern coasts as far north as Connecticut, but only as a straggler beyond that State.

Crows eat almost anything and the upland species sometimes becomes injurious to crops. The fish crow has little contact with farms, but it shares with its inland relative fondness for the eggs and young of other birds and from man's point of view sometimes seems too pronounced. In the salt marshes, undoubtedly a high percentage of the eggs eaten by crows are those of the clapper rail, or marsh hen, and it has never even been suggested that the numbers of that bird are thereby reduced. Under some conditions, as after the flooding of nests of clapper rail and other birds in salt marshes by exceptionally high tides, eggs are washed out in windrows, and then their consumption by crows has no unfavorable significance. The writer has heard crows condemned on account of the number of eggs-shells found under their nesting trees, when it was perfectly evident that most of these were from drowned nests of the clapper rail. This is said in extenuation of the food habits of crows, because of the prevalence of immoderate condemnation. The lesson is to observe carefully and to find out all possible about crow-egg relationships, or for that matter about any wildlife problem, before taking any action. Then there should be done what seems necessary, but no more.

CONSERVATION

A WEEKLY COLUMN OF PRACTICAL OPINIONS OF THE VITAL ISSUES AFFECTING THE USES AND ABUSES OF NATURAL RESOURCES BY MR. LUDLOW JENKINS MARSHFIELD.

BALD EAGLE

The bald eagle (Haliaeetus leucocephalus) lives almost throughout North America and breeds in great numbers in the salt marshes, but they are not in such large numbers as they were formerly. This is due to the fact that the osprey, being 30 to 40 inches long, with a wingspread of 70 to 85 inches. The adults are of a rusty brown color, with a white head and neck, and a white breast. The young are of a dark brown color, with a white head and neck, and a white breast. The bald eagle is a powerful bird, and is able to capture its prey with its talons. It is a scavenger, and feeds on dead fish and other animals. It is a common bird in the coastal regions of North America, and is particularly abundant in the salt marshes. VULTURES

Vultures, or buzzards, as they are commonly called in this country (the European buzzard is a large bird, and is not particularly common in this country), have no particular connection with salt marshes, but they are frequently seen in the salt marshes, and are particularly abundant in the salt marshes. They are scavengers, and feed on dead fish and other animals. They are a common bird in the coastal regions of North America, and are particularly abundant in the salt marshes.

"I'M THE GAL THAT 'KEEPS 'EM FRYING'"

Bob's away—keeping 'em frying and I'm the gal left behind to take care of things at home! In with all the other extra jobs, I like to see that my buddies here get a good home-cooked meal...so it's open house...and it keeps me on the jump cooking and baking! I love it...but it doesn't leave me much time...certainly not time for fussing over my skin, too—just before dinner I scoot upstairs, and in two minutes I'm fresh and new—thanks to Palmolive. Why, it's simply marvellous how that creamy Palmolive lather cleanses and tones up my skin...leaves it velvety-soft and smooth...without the slightest irritation. That's because Palmolive's made with the costliest blend of soothing Olive and Palm Oils...in my skin such as a new pin—thanks to Palmolive.
