Mrs. Muttart was a native of the place and was before her marriage a Miss MacDonald. She was a most estimable woman with a kindly disposition and very hospitable. She was a devoted Catholic and received the last rites of the Church from her pastor before her death. She leaves to mourn four sons, Joseph and Harry of North Carolina; Hubert of the West. Her husband predeceased her some years ago. The funeral took place yesterday morning from her late residence to Seven Mile Bay Church and Cemetery. The services, which were very largely attended, were conducted by Rev. W. E. Monaghan, pastor of the Church.—S.

SUCCESSFUL ENTERTAINMENT AT KENSINGTON

A most interesting entertainment was enjoyed by an appreciative audience in the King George Hall, Kensington, on Wednesday evening, October 12th, when a Major Bowes variety concert was presented under the direction of Mrs. Chester Simpson, sponsored by the Ladies Aid of the United Church.

The stage decorations were pleasing with their pretty arrangement of autumn flowers, leaves and shaded lighting and made an effective setting for the performance.

The artists were all in excellent form and the versatility of Major Bowes as he broadcast the news and naive criticisms throughout kept the audience in a happy mood. Rev. Mr. Thomas of Malpeque, in brief introductory remarks, introduced Major Bowes, who was cleverly impersonated by Mr. Norman MacDonald, Principal of Kensington School.

Mrs. (Rev.) Thomas gave a number of reading selections which were usually completely captivated the audience, so fine was the interpretation and perfect the rendition.

Mr. George Bowness and Mr. T. W. Bentley, both old favorites in Kensington were heard with good effect in several vocal selections.

Step-dancing numbers, by Mr. Therault, elicited much applause. Instrumental music was furnished by Summerside talent with violin and guitar. During an intermission home made pies were sold which were made by the A. who also entertained the visiting performers at the close of the evening.

Following is the program:—

National Unity

"I believe the first duty of any leader is to hold Canada together. Canadians should not think only of sectional problems. There must be a national outlook. Compromise and sacrifice are necessary to build Canada. No section could get 100 per cent of what it wanted."

Tribute was paid to Rt. Hon. B. Bennett for his brilliance, sincerity and "terrible industry." He gave a sense of direction to the people of Canada. Dr. Manion said he had sometimes strenuously disagreed with Mr. Bennett when they were in the cabinet together.

Monument to Mr. Bennett was the Empire trade pact granting to Canada a six-cent preference on wheat in the British market. Dr. Manion hoped nothing now being negotiated would remove this preference.

The Empire market was much more stable than that of the United States which persisted in purchasing less from Canada than Canada bought from her.

There were various tariffs imposed by the United States that hurt Canada.

Difficult to Deal With U. S. "All the United States is a very difficult country with which to deal," he said.

"Keep that in your mind when looking over the trade treaty which I expect will be made public in a few weeks."

Dr. Manion restated his belief in a moderate protective tariff. Both industry and workers need protection against cheap imports. Farmers, except wheat farmers of the west, deserved protection. Wheat farmers could not protect their own market.

"The object of protection is not the raising of prices but the holding of the market. If a tariff makes a price unreasonably high, the industry should lose its protection."

The Bennett Government imposed a 25 per cent tariff on farm implements. The succeeding Liberal Government reduced it to 7 1/2 per cent. Today implement prices were higher than when the tariff was reduced. There was no pledge now of no exploitation.

Canada should be able to take better care of her unemployed and say had lost her son and how was she progressing with the man who had loved her? Did she still love him? He was still proud of the cause of the Idle Rainbow. The Idle Rainbow was a coming serious in the Minnesota white piles. The government was conducting research. So that it hadn't affected them greatly though it might. However, he supposed that she was hardly interested in all that.

But she was, indeed she was. It was all so complicated in her mind. Why did she keep thinking about Rufus? After all, if he had cared about her really, would he have engaged himself to Julia? That is, formally engaged himself? He had shown her pretty plainly, hadn't he, what he expected her to do? And why in the world did she bother with all this anyway? If she was going to stay in New York she had better be looking for a job. Not that she couldn't last with Peggy for another month or two, but it was necessary. That is, if she stopped spending any but the necessary money. But that always made me feel a dull ache in my chest. Toby really was a dear.

And after all what had Henry Gordon to do with all this? With herself in fact? Nothing that she could see. A nice cowboy gone into the lumbering business. And that was that. But he had popped up in her life and had penetrated her thinking with such suddenness. And she kept thinking about him. Kept trying to find some connection with her life. With his life. With all their lives.

She came down Seventh Avenue and rambled the top bell of a three story brick house marked Hall.

"Madge says you started out this time in the afternoon? I thought you were one of the nine to five boys."

"I was," said Lindsay, taking off her coat and laying her gloves and bag aside. "And I'd like to be again."

others on relief but conditions favorable to her doing so were not established by present chaotic world conditions.

Capitalism had been built in association with democracy and this must be kept in mind in attempting to deal with modern problems.

Social Justice Demanded
Production was solved but the distribution of the product, which meant "work and wages" for the people, was not as widespread as it should be. Social justice must be corrected. Social justice for the aged and opportunity for youth were the keystone demands in the cry for social justice.

It was the hour of conservatism, "the conserving of our institutions," to demand this security and opportunity. Dr. Manion did not think criticism of his social justice policy as poor conservatism was justified.

In between the radical and the reactionary was the true Conservative.

"I believe in the middle-of-the-road course. I believe in attempting to correct the evils and defects in our system."

Unemployment was the nation's greatest problem, greater even than those of the western farmer and it must be corrected. Social justice and political and economic system is to be preserved.

Fear of poverty in old age and of unemployment made the ground fertile for various "isms." Remove the and the system would stand firm.

The physical hardships of pioneer days were not so great, believed Dr. Manion, as the hardships of youth today who faced lack of opportunity. There were mental hardships.

There were demoralized youth. Pride, self-dependence and independence were sapped by relief. It should be ended.

But that always made me feel a dull ache in my chest. Toby really was a dear.

And after all what had Henry Gordon to do with all this? With herself in fact? Nothing that she could see. A nice cowboy gone into the lumbering business. And that was that. But he had popped up in her life and had penetrated her thinking with such suddenness. And she kept thinking about him. Kept trying to find some connection with her life. With his life.
