He: No. This suit looks this way, because I slept in it last night.

He: Mae certainly has got a way with her.

She: Yeh! She's got away with lots of things.

It will Relieve a Cold—Colds are the commonest ailments of mankind and if neglected may lead to serious conditions. Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil will relieve the bronchial passages of inflammation speedily and thoroughly and will strengthen them against subsequent attack. And as it eases the inflammation it usually stops the cough because it allays the irritation in the throat. Try it and prove it.

Feminine Complications

Dighton nodded. "I shall be there, too," he assured Mafalda. "My doctor has recommended walking as good for the liver!"

They both laughed. As he pressed his lips to her hand he remembered something.

"Tonight is our secret, signorina, all of it. We will say nothing about our assassin, my struggle with him or his gun. His body will be washed up tomorrow, you understand, and it is better to know nothing about these things."

A white foreigner rested across her lips. "They are sealed," she assured him; "absolutely sealed."

Ten stairs above him she turned. "Will you swear to me you do not know who that man was?"

"I have not the remotest idea."

She glanced out to sea. "It is strange that he should have come upon us like that. That horrible mask, too! I shall dream of it!—Buona notte, caro!"

She was gone with that, and Dighton watched her slim form passing from one flight to the other until the summit was reached.

Dighton followed her example he filed and lit a pipe. Scanning the entire coast line within view, he found no trace of his recent antagonist. Unless he managed to see the body after fishermen had brought it in, the identity of the Lizard would never be revealed.

The realization of this left him disappointed. Unsolved mysteries were always unsatisfactory. And yet, after all, the only thing that really mattered was the fact that his enemy had ceased to exist.

Dighton did not go back for another dance. He crossed to the hotel by the bridge and ordered a drink from his room. He ordered a double whisky—and felt that he had earned it. It was the remedy Taverner would have advised—a nightcap to an adventure of which Taverner would have approved.

With the Pocket Death locked in a suitcase, he slept soundly—as soundly, in fact, as any ordinary guest who had traveled South for his health. He had not dealt with Ahlberg yet, the Lilliting of the Mediterranean, and he had a rendezvous on the morrow with the bewitching Mafalda!

His last waking thought concerned Marney. He wondered how long it would be before the little American made his way to the room at the back of the fruiterer's shop in the Via Emilia. When that worthy did come to town he would have news for him.

On the following morning Dighton breakfasted early and went out. Half an hour's stiff march over the wooded hillsides brought him to a lane that was little more than a cart track which led him between high banks toward a formidable iron gateway just visible ahead.

He was within a score of yards of this when he caught a glimpse of a heavy body crashing through the bushes to his right. Suddenly, almost on a level with his head, four enormous wolfhounds came into view, snarling and baring their fangs in a frenzy of furious excitement.

Dighton pushed on, keeping discreetly to the far side of the track. So far as he was able to see, there was nothing to prevent these beasts nurling themselves at him from the bank. Half-wild as they were, however, they did not attempt to cross the boundary line allotted them for protection, but came up and down it, reminding the traveler at every step that any attempt at entering

The many friends of Master Vance Dixon, little son of Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Dixon, of North Tryon, regret to learn of his unfortunate accident of a few days ago, when he was badly kicked with a horse. It is hoped that he may soon be around again and able to return to school, where he is sadly missed.

Mr. and Mrs. Lowell Compton, of Summerside, were visitors to Crapaud on Sunday, where they were guests of her mother, Mrs. D. McLean.

Mr. Eldon Dawson, of Augustine Cove, is spending a few days with relatives in Tryon.

Friends and neighbors of Mr. Albro Howatt, of Tryon, regret to learn of his severe illness, but hope that he may soon regain his usual good health and be able to resume his duties once again. Dr. E. A. Bell, of Cape Traverse, is in attendance.

Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Campbell and little son, also Master Kenneth Dawson, of Augustine Cove, motored to Charlottetown recently.

The congratulations of their many friends are being extended to Mr. and Mrs. Wendell Lea, of Tryon on the birth of a bouncing baby son. Both mother and baby are doing well.

Mr. Claude Leard, one of West Tryon's progressive young farmers, recently purchased a Ford truck, and hopes to get his spuds to market more quickly than ever.

The host of friends of Mrs. Smith Leard, of West Tryon, are very sorry to learn that she is seriously ill, having been confined to her bed for some time. Everyone hopes, however, that her sickness may not be of long duration.

The greater part of the potato crop in this section is already harvested. Some farmers, however, are only well under way and will finish yet in good time, if Jack Frost keeps away. The farmers in Tryon, let me warn you, know how to grow spuds, too, the only thing bothering them this year is the price, which continues to remain low.

Miss Isabel McFadyen, of Tryon, was a week-end visitor to her home in Riverdale.

The numerous young friends of Miss H. Cairns, of Mount Tryon, are sincerely sorry to learn that she had the misfortune to be kicked by a horse a few days ago, receiving a bad cut on the face, which, it is hoped, may soon heal up.

Mrs. James Arbing, of North Tryon, who has been confined to her bed for some time, is not recovering as quickly as has many friends would like, still being quite ill. But it is hoped she may soon recover and be able to resume her duties once again.

Tryon school has again re-opened after the Fall holidays, with a fair attendance of pupils, with the teachers: Miss Adelaide Ives (principal), and Miss Rette Toombs (assistant) again at the helm.

Mr. Purdy, of the Maritime Girls' Home, Truro, N. S., addressed a large congregation in the Baptist church at Tryon on Sunday evening, giving a very interesting and instructive address about the work there.

Miss Edith Lord, of Summerside, was a Sunday visitor to Tryon.

Mr. McKay, of Summerside, conducted the services in the Tryon United Church on Sunday morning, the regular pastor being unable to attend due to illness.

$3,000,000 EXPENDITURE TORONTO RADIAL LINE AND HIGHWAY.

TORONTO, Ont., Oct. 15.—The hauling of ties and rail equipment by the Toronto Transportation Commission along the Lake Shore Road marks the inception of a $3,000,000 scheme of improvement along the Toronto-Hamilton highway. The plans call for double tracking the radial and placing the tracks in the centre of the roadway and for widening the highway between the Humber river and Brown's Line at Etobicoke creek. The highway is to be widened to 86 feet from the city street limits to the west limit of New Toronto and to 100 feet from that point westward to Brown's Line.

Of the total expenditure of $3,000,000 involved, slightly over $2,000,000 is for the widening of the highway and the double-tracking of the Toronto Transportation Commission's line and the balance for the construction of new bridges over the Humber river and Mimico creek.

In all infantile complaints that are the result of the depredation of worms in the stomach and intestines Miller's Worm Powders will be found an effective remedy. They attack the core of these troubles, and by expelling the worms from the organs ensure an orderly working of the system, without which the child cannot maintain its strength or thrive. These powders mean health and happiness.

Parker House

The Parker House is now ready to take permanent and transient boarders. The house has been completely remodelled and beautifully finished. The table speaks for itself. Dinner parties and banquets especially. This house is located at 92 Kent Street, almost opposite City Hall.

the grounds of the Villa Sabino would entail fatal consequences. He did not pause at the gates. The careless din above him was too deafening, and he had no desire to attract more attention to himself than was necessary. From a metal road which branched presently to his left he obtained a view of the villa and outbuildings, interrupted only by a line of tall trees and the low roof of a porter's lodge.

The one thought at the back of Dighton's mind when he dropped down the steep path to Portofino was that the Villa Sabino was not going to be broken into too easily. There was at least a hundred yards of gravel drive to be traversed before the square-fronted main building was reached, and the finest sprinter on record could not hope to outride those hounds. Without the dogs, and assuming Ahlberg had not concealed a battery of his guns in the bushes, access to the property could be gained from innumerable points and there was ample cover to enable an intruder to approach the house without being observed.

Marney had declared that the dogs could not be poisoned. From a busy-point of view, this was a pity. It certainly prevented Dighton from employing methods which went against the grain. At a rough calculation, the grounds of the villa ran into three acres and the whole area had a free run over the whole area, for he had detected a distant baying of other dogs presumably from kennels at the rear of the building. It was conceivable that during the dark hours at least a dozen of these powerful brutes performed guard duty along the fringes of Ahlberg's territory.

The roofs of Portofino were below him when he framed the idea of retaining the Pocket Death, repairing the place where the electrical charge had shorted and using the last round on the dogs when attacked by them in the midst of a desperate raid. The flaw in this was so obvious that he discarded it almost immediately. It was probably that every dog in the place would make for him at the time or even if they did so, that they would be confined in so small a compass that the one round would account for them.

No, the Villa Sabino was to all intents and purposes impregnable, except by artifice. Future and more thorough surveys of this field of enterprise might reveal points which both Marney and himself had overlooked; but only Mafalda and Ahlberg could approach the building unchallenged and with impunity, and it was through the former that he must eventually obtain admittance.
