IGNORANT OF BIBLE

LONDON, Sept. 13.—(CP)—A boy of 12 told an East London juvenile court: "I have never heard of the Bible."

A probation officer said the boy was a member of a Sunday School, to which he replied: "We only sing hymns, we don't do any reading there."

The boy was charged with receiving stolen chocolate and concealing it. He was remanded pending police inquiries.

DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE—Here's how to work it

One letter simply stands for another in this example A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophes, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.

W.C.T.U. NOTES

SOMEBODY IS FOLLOWING YOU

"Somebody is catching a glimpse of you as you tread your way through life and unconsciously going your way. Perhaps merely because he knows no better direction to take.

"The fatal power of leading others is inevitable, and nobody is so insignificant and commonplace that he does not determine by his example the life of someone else. People do things because others do, more than for any other reason.

"A little of this pulling power rests in every one of us. No matter how small and inconsiderable a person you seem to yourself to be, someone is being led by you."

—The National Voice.

CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIP DEPARTMENT

"If all were easy, if all were bright, Where would the cross be, where would the fight, But in the darkness, God gives to you Chances of proving that you are true."

So writes one of our County Superintendents in her report to me. And how true these words are. Our work is not easy. It is often very discouraging, but we have one to whom we can tell our problems, and always be sure that He is interested, and willing to give us new strength for our task.

Again I quote: "Christ still is the answer to our every need. The living Christ is a reality. There are times when the mind is full of doubts and the soul cries out, 'Who is sufficient for these things?' The joyful presence of the Living God doubtless disappears like fog in the sunshine!"

I wish I could quote from many more of the letters I have received but space will not permit. However, I can tell you our women in this department are doing a wonderful piece of work. All of them are agreed that this department is the most encouraging and most important part of their work.

When we realize this to be so, we can take new courage and continue working towards our final goal. "A Country free from Alcohol," and to our Lord we will give the praise.

Worthy of homage and of praise, Worthy of all to be adored, Exhaustless theme of Heavenly joys.

Thou, Thou art worthy, Jesus Lord.

TIDINGS

Tidings' staff are grateful to every Union and individual that gave special financial assistance in answer to the S.O.S. call a year ago—for the advance of $700 to the Ontario Provincial Union at the last convention; to the faithful Unions and members that have paid back into the Ontario treasury this gift that was so timely, necessary and generous; and to Toronto District Union for the generous gift of $1,000 in March when immediate help was again necessary. Tidings has received from Ontario members in this way over $1,736.

To print 9,500 copies of a 20-page paper ten times a year costs $7,000 or seven and one-third cents per copy, or seventy-three and one-third cents for the ten issues, which is about 25 cents more than we now ask as the subscription price. The question is where next year are we to find this extra 25 cents per member?

In return for your generous support we hope that Tidings has been a help in the work of your Unions and in temperance education of young and old.

Apart from the five lessons of the Temperance Study Course in Sunday Schools, Tidings is the only paper giving regularly temperance information, in the form of instruction and illustration for all declaration of the young which all declare is the great hope for a future sober Canada.

Some provinces are continuing the $5 gift to Tidings. Ontario is requesting each Union to contribute 25 cents per member extra to Tidings through the regular local county and provincial treasuries. This money to

NORTHERN CAPITAL

Lonely Parade

By Fannie Hurst

The Charlottetown was fumbling in the recesses of the drawer which contained her knitting for a small stack of unopened letters which had arrived by the day's last post. She drew them out and remained seated before the desk, dallying them between her fingers. Three of them were identifiable by their envelopes. One was from a theatrical producer. The second bore the name of a life insurance company. The third was in flowing longhand familiar to her.

She spread them like the cards in a game of solitaire, flipping each one as she placed it on the desk. A man-size silver watch, propped against a bronze inkstand, ticked away a baker's dozen of contemplative minutes while she gazed at the closed envelopes as if to draw off their contents as the sun draws moisture. Presently, the letters still unopened, she began to knit softly in the dusk, the needles forced darts of brightness, their noises soft and sedate. They created little areas of inner quiet within her, these needles, clearing the paths of her mind of small circumstances.

It was a silence upon which she had learned to depend and into which she retired as deliberately as she walked into her bedroom and closed the door after it. It was a habit of mental behavior that had a revivifying effect upon her; her equivalent of Kitty's nap before dinner; a pick-up after a work day.

There were many reasons why each of the three letters before her had the potential power to destabilize the stillness which she invoked with her knitting needles. And so, quiescent there in the half light, her eyes and her mind half open, like a frog on a water lily pad, she continued to postpone the moment of their opening.

Kitty, whose perceptions were sharp as steel, called this withdrawal of mental place in the eyes and manner of her Charlottetown, "her going away look." The needles clicked, the small fire made little hisses, the heavy doors left slightly ajar, the clean November air, bugeed slowly as the crinkled lids remained lowered over the knitting. It was a November twilight that was full of high wind. Let the high winds blow; the high winds of a day that had yielded not one single inch in the myriad projects which were cloaked under the terse door plate which read: Charlottetown, Inc. Bookings.

First, the case of Hermann Schlossberg of Vienna, who had been sent to her by a Baroness von Wolfgram, whose Berlin lecture tour she had once managed, had come to its unsuccessful conclusion that day. The immense chemical of success which she had succeeded in interesting in Schlossberg's new dye process had finally decided after months of consideration to negotiate for it. Schlossberg, living in a hotel of good address on money advanced by Charlottetown, had yet to be handed this staggering blow.

Also, a cable lay tucked beneath the blotter of her desk, announcing that a band of Lilliputians, a current novelty success in Berlin which she was maneuvering to bring to America, was restrained from leaving Germany in immigration and impending lawsuits.

Well, let the winds blow. It was warm and secure here, temporarily, at least, in this fine new house she shared with Kitty and Stella. It was warm and secure here in these rays of inner stillness, while the long steel knitting needles clicked. This strange new house of herself, Kitty and Stella—what structure this? How, out of her nicely ordered social background, had she slipped into this world outside the way of most feminine flesh?

The needles drooped, paused, rose again, clicked. I must go on now, let me say, unmarried until I die. I like it the way, yet I want the other too. Security. Freedom from money worries. I want that and yet I want to be living here in this ridiculous abortion of a home, living on my wits. On tips from old Baldwin.

The needles slid down on to her fat lap and lay there. The clock ticked, the curtains belled inward, the noises of the street spoke up sharply. Finally the Charlottetown lead over and ripped open her three waiting letters. The first declined a play. The second pronounced that an arthritic condition disqualified her for life insurance. The third, in the flow-
