

Good Entry List For Thanksgiving Day Horse Races

Here's something that disturbs my days,
The constant spread of mayonnaise.
At luncheon, dinner, supper, tea,
They serve it out in gobs to me;
It overflows in oozy streams
On salads, fruits, into my dreams;
Won't someone please find means
and ways
To check this flow of mayonnaise?

"Pepper" Martin Given Ovation On Return Home

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Oct. 8.—Another "We," "Pepper" Martin and the St. Louis Cardinals came home today to a heroic welcome as the "Spirit of St. Louis" once more rode high along the banks of the Mississippi.

At least 2,000 of the most rabid faithful stormed the railroad terminal, shouting, mauling, surging in to get their hands on the simple youngster who almost single-handedly has routed the world champion Philadelphia Athletics to give the Cardinals a 3 to 2 lead in games and lift a National League champion to within one game of the first World Series conquest for that circuit in five years.

They will see him tomorrow, these riotous rooters, eagerly taking his cut against the sweeping slants of "Big Jagger" Earnshaw in the sixth game at Sportsman's Park, opening of the final act of one of the most thrilling baseball dramas of all times. But they could not wait to express their delight at the feats of the youthful hitting and base running dynamo, a demoralizing .667 hitter in his first world series.

The moment the special train of the Cardinals drew into the station here at 12:45 p.m. (C. S. T.) after a swift run from Philadelphia, Martin's particularly brilliant play-ground, the faithful burst through the guarding lines and swarmed over the platform.

Meek and mild for the first time since the series opened, grinning sheepishly, "Pepper" stepped down into the throng that yelled his name, patted his shoulders until his big gray sombrero kept slipping down over his eyes, and made an effort to get him up on their shoulders for a parade of triumph.

Then it was that "Pepper" quailed, perhaps for the first time in his life, and he grabbed the arm of Mrs. "Pepper" Martin and hung

STORM KILLED 10,000 TROUT

SANTA FE, N. M., Sept. 8. (U.P.)—Fishermen estimated that a recent hail and rain storm on the Pecos river killed at least 10,000 trout. The trout probably could have weathered the mud bath and escaped death from the shower of hail stones had it not been for a sudden change in temperature.

Third Game Of Maritime Ball Finals To-Day

Do the Abegweits possess the power, punch and what have you, in order to stage a comeback on their home diamond against St. Stephen today, the scene of the third game of the Maritime baseball finals. Should they win, a fourth game will be necessary on home soil.

From the gate it looks as if Abegweits will be forced to play ball as they have never played before to take the New Brunswickers. However, a tightening up in the infield and heavier work at the bat is looked for. Should this come to pass, the Stephenites will yet be forced to work hard for their championship—which isn't their home town encouragement and cooperation.

The Abegweits returned from their trip last night, and although somewhat disappointed in the mainland games, are nevertheless determined to fight every inch of the way.

The boys are doing their level best, notwithstanding anything to the contrary, and as a consequence should be welcomed in their own ball yard today by a rooting, enthusiastic home town crowd. Let's see every red-blooded fan at the ball park. A capacity and colorful gathering will surely work wonders with the team. Give 'em the loyal support which they readily deserve—that's the main idea of championship—which isn't their home town encouragement and cooperation.
