Greenland Moves Towards Independence

COPENHAGEN, July 8 — (Reuters) — An independent democracy is in the making beyond the Arctic Circle.

Greenland, the world's largest island in which fewer than 20,000 people live along the long coastline of a territory which comprises nearly 850,000 square miles, is approaching the age of majority.

Preliminary plans to give Greenland a greater measure of independence were launched in 1939 on the initiative of the Danish Government, but war prevented any decisive step.

The years of separation from Denmark while the latter was occupied by the Germans, however, saw a more centralized administration grow up under resident Danish authorities, and today Greenland wants her own centralized government.

To deal with the many and diverse problems of an adolescent democracy a joint committee was formed consisting of eight members of the Greenland committee of the Danish House of Commons and six delegates from Greenland.

Under the present system, Greenland is divided into two administrative territories, each with a governor and a local council elected indirectly by members of municipal councils and local councils known as "Sysselraad."

The Greenlanders now want only one governor and one central council, elected directly by the people. This would have the affect of diminishing influence of Danish officials who are always members of the "Sysselraad." The municipal councils want more independence in local matters.

In Memoriam

MRS. ALFRED MITCHELL

In the passing of Mrs. Alfred Mitchell of Mount Stewart, the community lost a well-known and highly respected resident, one who was always ready and willing to help wherever there was sadness or sickness. Death occurred very unexpectedly on May 15th, 1946, at the home of her son, Arthur Mt. Stewart.

The deceased the former Miss Caroline Duggan was born at Pownal in 1872.

There are left to cherish her memory, besides her sorrowing husband, six daughters: Muriel (Mrs. Fred Affleck) Mt. Stewart; Laura (Mrs. Cecil Stewart) Charlottetown; Lydia (Mrs. Russell McGuirk) Boston, Mass.; Emma (Mrs. Preston Sorrey) Montague; Annie (Mrs. Samuel Birt) Pisquid; five sons George of Dromore, Willard Roy, Arthur and John all of Mt. Stewart. Also forty grandchildren four great-grandchildren, a number of other relatives and a host of friends. One son and one daughter predeceased her some years ago.

The funeral services, which were very largely attended, were conducted by her pastor, Rev. Mr. Mercer on May 17th. The Hymns sung were "What a Friend We Have in Jesus" and "Abide With Me". The Hymn "The Old Rugged Cross" was beautifully rendered by the choir.

The pallbearers were Messrs. Cecil Stewart, John Jay, Samuel Birt, Fred Affleck, Patrick Kelly and Henry McGuirk.

Following were the floral tributes: Pillow, The family.

Wreaths:—
Mr. and Mrs. Henry McGuirk.
Pisquid East Women's Institute.
Mrs. Pius McCarthy.
Mrs. Archibald Griffin.
Ethel (sister) and Joe, Boston.
Bessie (sister).

Peter Jackman and family, Village Green.
Miss Pearl McGuirk, Dromore.
Gerald and Clifford McGuirk, Dromore.

Card Of Thanks

Mr. Alfred Mitchell and family express sincere thanks to all friends who sent flowers and messages of sympathy. Also to all friends and neighbors for their many acts of kindness during their recent sad bereavement.

Y.P.U. MEETING — The Cornwall Y.P.U. met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Watson Livingstone on Friday evening with a good attendance. Jean Boyle was the leader for the evening and Lennie MacFadyen was appointed leader for the next meeting which will be held in the form of an outdoor meeting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Gordon MacMillan on Friday evening. Gordon Boyle presided over the business period and Orville Murray and Parker Jewell conducted the recreation period. A delicious lunch was served by hostess and committee in charge. Auld Lang Syne brought a pleasant evening to a close.

Personals

Mr. and Mrs. George Arsenault of Rusticoville have returned home from Quebec where they attended the Pilgrimage at Saint Anne De-Beaupre.

Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Booth of Toronto are guests at The Charlottetown. Mrs. J.W. Heseltine accompanied them to the Island and is visiting relatives in Wheatley River.

Mr. Parker A. Horne arrived home from Boscowen, New Hampshire, to attend the funeral of his brother J. Ray Horne. He was accompanied by Messrs James and Robert Colby. They leave on return to Boscowen today.

HANGMAN'S FEE

In 17th century England, the hangman of Dumfries was entitled to dip his iron ladle into each bag of produce as his pay from the inhabitants of the country.

Card of Thanks

Mrs. Alvin C. Ford and daughter Marjorie, wish to thank friends and relatives for their acts of kindness during their recent sad bereavement.

In Memoriam

In loving memory of our dear daughter (Doris Bernadette) Mrs. Leo Greenan, who passed away July 10, 1945.

Just one year ago dear Doris
Though to us, it seems much more,
You were called up home to Heaven,
Where pain and sickness are no more.

Just when your life was brightest,
Just when your years were best,
You were called from this world of sorrow,
To a home of eternal rest.

Lovingly Remembered by Her Parents, Mr. & Mrs. Ollie McCarville, Freetown.

IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of my dear wife,
MRS. LEO GREENAN
who passed away one year ago today, July 10, 1945.

She had a nature you could not help loving,
And a heart that was purer than Gold,
And to those who knew her and loved her,
Her memory will never grow old.

Lovingly Remembered and Sadly Missed by Her Husband.

THREE MEN AND A MOUNTAIN

"Buck up Rupert. The professor's right. You couldn't do anything on your own. Don't worry, we'll save your old bones somehow!"

He turned to look at her. Then he felt for her hand.

"Thanks, Florence! You're a darling!"

She felt a little thrill of happiness run through her.

Back in the comfortable living room of the hostel, before a roaring fire, they held a council of war, while a hot supper was being prepared for them.

"Now then!" said Ellington. As he often did, he had ceased to be the professor, and had reverted to his war-time role of company commander.

He glanced round the circle of tent faces.

Rupert knows all about the diggings, and what chances of their holding out are," he continued. "Rupert, will you please explain the position?"

Rupert spoke with his usual precision.

"The position is this. The rain has got at the foundations of the old camping site. There is a chance that the cave where I have been carrying on my main work will collapse altogether. But I do not think that very probable."

"Unfortunately there is a worse danger. There was a great deal of valuable stuff which I did not have time to remove. I left it covered up with sacking, and put a native on guard.

"This torrential rain may flood the place out. If that happens, these relics will be washed away, and our chances of finding them again are exceedingly remote."

"I see." Professor Ellington brooded.

"Then there is only one thing to do. We must wait until morning. If the storm hasn't abated then, I shall go with you to the cave and——"

"Excuse me, sir." Frank Carter leaned forward. "Why wait until morning? I agree that it would be madness for one man to go up on the mountain to-night. But if two went—Rupert and myself—we might be able to do something before it's too late."

"Thank's Frank."

Rupert's face flushed with pleasure. "That's jolly sporting of you."

"Oho!" roared the professor. "And leave me out of it? Dash it, Carter, you came to South Africa to race, I came to see these relics. You can't leave me out of this!"

The younger men glanced at each other.

"Quite so, sir," said Frank soothingly. "But Rupert and I could do all that's necessary. There's no need for you to go out in the rain and——"

The professor glowered.

"I hope you are not trying to insinuate," he rumbled, "that I am too old to go out in the rain. Hang it, man, do you realize that I am shortly to be married! Bah, I'm as fit as either of you! No, the three of us will go. But we'll have a good tuckin first. We'll probably need it."

Presently they sat down to a feast of venison, paw paw and coffe—the men's laced with brandy.

Each of the women sat and watched her man.

Outside, the rain lashed down monotonously, and the jagged flashes of lightning revealed the towering mass of the mountain, black and seeing angrily to brood.

One thought was uppermost in each women's mind.

Would her man came back safely?

Finally the men dressed themselves in appropriate clothes, long rubber boots such as Rupert had been wearing, a turned down hat, and a mackintosh. Each crried a stout stick nd a knapsck in which were provisions and some brandy. There was no real rock-climbing to be done, fortunately, but the path, especially in the storm, was winding and treacherous, easily lost in the darkness. Once off the path and a man might wander for hours, in danger of falling down a crevasse and injuring himself seriously, or worse.

FLORENCE FOLLOWS

They went towards the door. Unconsciously in this moment of crisis each forgetting the presence of the others, they split for a moment into couples.

"Goodbye, my dear!" said the professor heartily, to Christine. "Nothing to worry about, you know. We'll be back in a couple of hours."

"Look after yourself, old boy," she murmured. "Or I'll—I'll sue you for breach of promise!"

She kissed him.

"So long, Rupert," murmured Florence. "I—I'm sure it will be all right."

"I nearly lost you once," whispered Dorothy. "Don't take risks!"

Frank smiled. "Is it likely—with you waiting here for me?"

Then they were gone. A flash of lightning showed them marching down the path heads bent before the rain. The darkness swallowed them up.

The women returned slowly to the fire. They spoke little, and their eyes wandered constantly to the window, where the lightning revealed spasmodic glimpses through the girls' heads, because similar thoughts were passing through her own. But they must not give way to fancies.

Christine, as the oldest, decided that it was up to her to take a firm grip of the situation. She knew what thoughts were passing

AND it's mighty big business... Last year tourists spent more than one hundred and sixty million dollars in Canada. This year, with millions of American visitors expected, that figure may well be surpassed. It means extra income for you, for every Canadian. Tourist money gets around. It flows to every part of the country.

This year particularly we must make sure that our friendly visitors enjoy themselves, that they'll carry back good reports of our hearty hospitality. Then they'll come again— and their friends will come—and Canada's tourist industry will continue to be a source of ever increasing prosperity through the years.

Here's what we're telling

OUR GOOD NEIGHBOURS

Your Canadian Travel Bureau, formed to protect and promote your interests in Canada's tourist industry, is running advertising in leading U.S. newspapers reminding American readers of the beauty and diversity of Canada's tourist attractions. At the same time it is tactfully reminding them that in view of travel and accommodation difficulties this summer, they will be wise to make reservations ahead.

Give them a friendly CANADIAN welcome!
