Dorothy Dix Says—

SHANGHAIED HUSBANDS NEVER GIVE CAPTORS EXPECTED BLISS Men Must Be Extra Wary Of Strange Females Writing Letters, Camping On Their Trails

DEAR MISS DIX—I am quite plump and have a very large mouth, hands that cannot easily be hidden, but I am very affectionate and always wanted to marry and have a family. About a year ago I met a man who was in our city on a business trip. He was well-educated, nice looking, easy going, with no bad habits, so I decided to marry him if it was humanly possible.

We had one date before he left, but I knew that he was returning in a few weeks, so I made up a business question and wrote him for some information. He replied, and then I frequently wrote him long letters, some of which he answered, but only in a friendly way.

The next time he was in town he came by my office to ask me to go to dinner, and when I saw him I rushed up, thinking my arms round him and kissed him. He was surprised, but when I left him that night I kissed him again. After that I wrote more often and he answered occasionally, but not loving letters I had hoped for.

However, I told my family and friends that we were engaged, even though he had never mentioned marriage. Once I wrote him that I hoped our first child would be a boy, thus taking our marriage for granted. He replied that he was engaged to someone else, but I paid no attention to that and kept on writing affectionate letters.

After some time I felt that I was losing all hold on him, so I went to his city to see him. He did not seem glad to see me, but I had a lucky break—he was in a few days and that gave me a chance to make much of him, even though his landlady did object to my visiting him in his room.

When I got home I told everybody that we were to be married, and I made all preparations. Several of the girls had showers for me. But when he came he refused to go through with it at first. I told him about the showers and that he had put me in an awful spot, and cried, and as he is very kind-hearted he finally consented to marry me. I went down and got the license and the ceremony was performed.

Now I wanted to get married for a home. I was tired of going to work every day. I knew he would make me a good living and I wanted companionship. I thought that if I always made a fuss over him that he would be satisfied. At first I tried to be nice to me, but after a few weeks he gave that up and paid me no attention.

We live in a little suburban town, but as he does not take me to see his friends or ask them to come to see us I am very lonesome. He never takes me any place, will not go out with me, will not even occupy the same room with me, does not want me to even touch him, but he is polite enough to leave him alone. I have a home, food and clothes, but not as much companionship as I had before I was married.

I could get my job back, and sometimes I wonder if I should not do that and go to work for I do not believe he is any nice. I wonder if I should do that? Or could you suggest some way in which I might arouse his interest? This has not turned out the way I planned it at all. DISILLUSIONED.

WOMAN TRAPPED BY OWN CONTRACTIONS

ANSWER—It is not uncommon for the bitter to get bitten and for those who try to play scurvy tricks on others to find that they have fallen into the traps they laid for their victims. Such is your case. By every underhanded, devious device that a woman's fancy could conjure up you forced me into one of my his and now you find that you are getting the worst of the bargain.

For you have a husband who has a contempt for you, who will have nothing to do with you, who will not even introduce you to his friends, and your last estate is worse than your first.

I print your letter in full because it is the revelation of the tactics of the man-hunter that I trust will be a warning to many other unsuspecting males who are being pursued by women who are bent on capturing them and enslaving them. Surely if this doesn't teach them to watch their steps when strange females begin opening up correspondences with them and writing them love letters and otherwise camping on their trails, nothing will.

And I also offer this letter as a warning to the husband-hunters to desist from their dangerous sport, for their own good as well as for that of their unfortunate prey. No happiness comes to a woman from forcing a man to marry her. Shanghaied husbands never become household pets.

DEAR DOROTHY DIX—My husband and I have been married for over fifteen years and would have been perfectly happy except for one thing. When I was a young girl, I made a mistake that I have regretted all my life, and although I have been a goodwife and mother this one mistake has always stood between us. My husband says he just cannot forget the past, and it is making a wreck out of him and me. What shall I do? MISERABLE WIFE.

HUSBAND SHOULD FORGIVE WIFE'S PAST ERROR

ANSWER—Surely in all of these years of straight living and tenderness and kindness to your husband you should be big enough to forgive and forget, especially as your sin was not against him.

If you had been unfaithful to him, it would be a different story, but you have been true and loyal to him, and he might take into consideration your youth and inexperience and how easy it is for an unsophisticated little girl to be led into temptation by her emotions.

It is not only wrong, but foolish, for your husband to dwell upon his grievance against you until he has made the one black spot shut out all of the sunshine of his life. He is losing his mental balance. And if he does not force himself to take a saner view of the subject, he will wreck his home and ruin not only his life and your life, but the lives of the children.

Millions of women are married to men whose pasts have plenty of blotches on them, but they ignore them and live happily together. I advise your husband to adopt this feminine philosophy.

Living & Leisure The Woman's Realm

"IF" FOR MODERN HOUSEWIFE

(Elizabeth Douglas in Montreal) If you can rise at seven every morning. Yet look as fresh as if you'd slept all night. Prepare the breakfast pleasantly (not scolding). The friendly chats with milk-and-baker-men).

If you can bake a pie; keep stew from burning. Answer the doorbell and the telephone at once. Hiding the while a most insistent yearning. Occasionally to be let alone.

If you can keep your patriotic ardor Under control through every threatening storm. Of rage at idle folk . . . and try the harder. To prize your apron as your uniform.

If you can baste a roast . . . and keep your temper. Trip on a yelping, puppy and not mind. Manage your ration cards without a whimper. Then . . . you're a Housewife — and you might do worse!

SUMMER LAUNDRY

Keeping youngsters in clean clothes involves a lot of washing and ironing, but the job can be made easier with a little planning. For summer clothes, if possible, materials that do not require ironing and garments which are lightweight enough to make for ease and speed in laundering—ones that can be popped into suds that cleanse without hard rubbing or scrubbing and leave the colors bright and gay. Complicated fastenings that slow up both pressing and ironing should be avoided, and if you have ever hunted for a small sock or belt, you will find it a very good idea when putting away the laundry, to insert these in the pockets of the outfit they will be worn with.

HEALTHY BABY

Cleanliness, health experts insist, is the first requisite for a healthy baby. Infants, especially, are susceptible to dust-carried germs, and their daily bath—either at the beginning or end of the day—is the most important part of their care. Young babies should be bathed in tepid water with a soft, washcloth and a pure white mild soap. When it is thoroughly dried, the baby should be carefully powdered or oiled, and dressed in a fresh shirt. And not to defeat all your careful precautions against dust-carried germs, make sure that the crib blankets and bed linen are everfresh.

TASTY MEDICINE PRESCRIBED FOR SUMMER DIET

How would you like it if the doctor said he was going to prescribe a tonic for you and then told you to eat all the strawberries you possibly could? Sounds like a fairy tale, doesn't it? It's not a fairy tale though. You are the lucky patient and the doctor is no less an authority than Dr. L. B. Pett, Director of Nutrition Services at Ottawa. Frequent doses of luscious, sun-ripened strawberries is the tonic he is prescribing for Canadians tonight.

"Strawberries," says Dr. Pett "are one of the best known sources of Vitamin C. We don't say much about them during the winter time when we speak of the foods which supply this important vitamin. We might be charged with mental cruelty if we listed strawberries in January when they could only make your mouth water!"

At this time of year, strawberries surpass even the citrus fruits and tomatoes top-rankers of the Vitamin C-rich foods at other times. Many Canadians have not been receiving all the Vitamin C they need during the last few months but now's the time to make up the lack. A baker's dozen of luscious strawberries will supply a full day's requirements of Vitamin C, surely no pleasant tonic was ever prescribed!

"Eat strawberries raw — and eat them often while they are in season," is Dr. Pett's advice.

SURPLUS HAIR BLEACHED SIMPLY

There's a tremendous difference between superfluous hair and that which is unwanted. Superfluous refers to a too abundant growth of hair, which may appear on the face, arms, legs or along the natural hairline. Unwanted hairs are those which grow naturally on the body and which can be removed from under the arms by shaving or the use of a good depilatory or which may be bleached so that they are scarcely noticeable.

Follow the directions TO THE LETTER. If a depilatory is to be used, it is necessary that accompanying directions be followed to the letter. One of the newest depilatories has won high favor because it is absolutely odorless and does a thorough job of removing hairs.

This, as well as all others, removes the hair temporarily. Of course new hairs will grow, because the hair root has not been destroyed.

To bleach unwanted hairs, simply make a paste of chalk of magnesium (ask your druggist for magnesium carbonate), peroxide

HINTS ON ETIQUETTE

If you want to be popular, listen to what people you are with talk about. They will doubtless talk about what interests them most. Listen with sincere interest, and if you do this with everyone you meet, you will soon be well liked.

EGG FACTORY

Feeding hens liberally during hot weather pays, not only in present egg production but the good effects continued during the Fall months when prices are high. Flocks that have to pick their own living during the summer, with only a grain fed at night, perhaps, are not likely to return a profit. Poorly fed hens moult earlier, and early moulters are not the profitable laying. More than that, the poorly fed hen is in no condition to lay when the frosty nights come, and the price of eggs goes up with a bound. She is going to use her reserve to sustain herself instead of in the manufacture of eggs.

WOODEN SOLES

Britain's women, many of them, already are wearing shoes with wooden soles, and the Board of Trade says now that it is most probable that all ranges of men's footwear also will be wooden soled.

EDIBLE BRICK

Production of a potato brick which, when crumbled and mixed with hot water, serves one hundred soldiers, has proved successful in London. The product is only one result of experiments in dehydration and compression of food. Similar experiments are being made with milk, eggs and cabbage in the move to save shipping space.
