In Melville, Sask.

The following item from the Melville (Saskatchewan) Advance, June 16, will be read with interest and appreciation here:
"Rev. Arthur Joseph Sullivan, O.M.I., son of Mrs. J. T. Sullivan, who as the first Melville boy to enter the Roman Catholic priesthood, was ordained at Battleford on Friday, June 10, and came to his home town Sunday, June 12 to celebrate his first Solemn Mass in St. Henry's Church and later that evening was guest of honor at a reception held in the Town Hall."
Rev. Arthur J. Sullivan was born at Souris, P.E.I., 24 years ago, his parents came to Melville where he spent his boyhood and where he spent his home always. "Art" as he is familiarly known by everyone in town, and popular in the whole of Saskatchewan who might have made a name for himself in the world of hockey had he chosen to do so. However, he chose to enter the priesthood and for the past seven years had prepared himself to that end. He spent a year in St. Paul's College, Winnipeg, before entering the Oblate Scholasticate, Battleford. He was ordained along with five other Saskatchewan cleric students by Prince Reginald Duprat, of Prince Albert, in the Church of St. Vital, Battleford, June 10th.

Reception in Town Hall
"The Town Hall was filled to capacity for the reception for Rev. Sullivan on Sunday evening. The whole Roman Catholic community attending as well as many friends of the new priest who were not of the Roman Catholic faith. A program had been arranged for the occasion by the Dominican Sisters.

The event was marked by the presentation of a Father Sullivan sick bag to the congregation of St. Henry's Church as a tangible expression of the regard held for him by the community. Father Stanley made the presentation. He said they were gathered there to welcome Father Sullivan home, to congratulate him on realizing his boyhood dream of becoming a priest and to wish him every success in his new work. It was a time of happiness and joy to all present. Father Stanley, but at the same time anyone so doing entered into a life of sacrifice, and he asked prayers offered, and he asked the strength to carry out his work. Father Stanley also congratulated Dr. and Mrs. Sullivan on their new home. He said most of the priests today could be attributed to the influence of good parents, and particularly of the parents of the priests of today. He said that the love and fear of God prevailed.

"A Happy Occasion"
"Father Czujak followed, to state it was a very happy occasion for him to be back in Melville and to help certain projects in connection with Father Sullivan. He mentioned that Art Sullivan had been outstanding in his youth and he, Father Czujak, had become his confidant. In the priesthood, Father Czujak had promised to witness the ordination and to assist him in which now he was doing so. Father Czujak congratulated both Father Sullivan and his parents.

Father Sullivan was visibly affected by the rising to reply said his heart was overflowing with gratitude, too full to give an adequate expression. He thanked the community for their splendid gift, the Sisters for the fine program he had so enjoyed, and the non-Catholic friends who had that night honored him by their presence. He saw many there that night whom he had looked up to in his youth, admiring their lives and influence in the community. He thanked some extent had been influenced himself by them. He knew that on entering the priesthood, had become a member of every family yet belong to none. They all knew of sorrow and misery in this world, he said, and as a priest he pledged himself to pray for them, to give him health and strength to do this."

Then the names of the tunes followed and the interesting and historic memories that they evoke down through the past thirty years, concluding—
"Alexander's Ragtime Band" closes with the playing of jazz in Carnegie Hall. It has covered a lot of territory and what's more remarkable, has done it under the auspices of one man, Irving Berlin. As Alexander Woolcott wrote in 1925, with a precision that earns him honor as a prophet of the work of Irving Berlin is that of the American epic and the epic is still in the making." "Alexander's Ragtime Band" brings the epic up to date."

(By E. O. LAIRD)
THE SEER

He was known as "The Seer," mainly because of his appearance and because of what he said; but in reality Asari was a teller of the tale and earned his living by the literal sweat of his brow.
When I first knew of him, he was a man of middle size and a little taller than the average. His lank body carelessly garbed with wrinkled clothes betrayed his utter indifference to the world's fashion and regard for the world's opinion of his laws. His swarthy coloring gave him the appearance of an Oriental, which was intensified by his piercing, glittering eyes of the Eastern Mystic.
Like the other men of his community, he sowed and planted, reaped and harvested with the rhythmic passage of the seasons; but through the rhythmic thread, were and out of the world's thread, were the friends of his friends and neighbors. There was a certain mystic, horoscopes, his College of Eugenics, topics of conversation which disclosed his mysticism did not remain since it was permeated with a friendliness, which if possible, would have embraced the whole universe. Indeed, it would have seen his joy to have taken the faintest ray of humanity, which have set them firmly in the paths of righteousness, fore-ordained, directed and led by the eternal stars. Upon meeting a friend, it was his custom to grasp the hand warmly, and to hug the man, (or Sir) the star that ruled at your birth gave you a marvelous musical conjunction with cause it was in your great weakness in your stomach. And, so on; different stars, different abilities, different weaknesses.
The character was viewed by the people in various ways. There were those who topped their heads, but he laughed and openly admitted fun, and others, still, admitted fun, but "that there might be something in what the seer said."
But, no matter how it viewed this eccentric part of him, the country side as a man of deep respect and admiration for his way with "the things that grow." There was a beautiful affinity between him and nature, in the blossoming orchard, his acres of strawberries, his wonderful flowers. Thus surrounded by the softness of the mystic and canopied with the eternal vastness of the heavens, he saw through the glass darkly that which our eyes perchance are too dim to see.

As a sequel to last week's amusing names of English hamlets we might list some interesting Canadian names. An article in a recent Toronto Saturday "By Rielle Thomson" includes many of them. For example "From birth English-speaking Quebecers have been so accustomed to the towns and village names of their Province that they are unaware either of their beauty or of their significance. Who would recognize names like Good Earth, Little Christmas, The Sound of Terrebonne, L'Epiphanie, Les Eboulements, and Metis-sur-Mer serve to obliterate their interesting significance.

"The various intriguing names of Quebec cantons, villages and parishes—all fall into various groups. There are animal names, religious names, euphonious combine names which strangely combine French and English. Of the last, there is an abundance of villages with names like St-Gabriel de Brandon. One of the most interesting is the linking of the most interesting in the name Ste-Anastasia-de-Nel. But there are others which ring strange in our ears. Witness Notre-Dame-de-Lourdes-de-Ham. But of the French-English names, the great classic is of course, Sacre-Coeur-de-Jesus-de-Crabtree Mills. The Saguenay is peculiarly rich in descriptive names. St-Alexis-de-la-Baie-des-Hal is a pleasing example of both. The seaman and punctuated names of the first settled Canada left its mark on the language of Quebec which is still a dancer between the two. True, this heritage appears in place names of the Province, the most famous of which is St-Anne-de-Bowaport, better known as the miscellaneous Ste-Anne-de-Beaupre. Then there are the perplexing names. Ste-Marie-Salome owes its origin not to a dancer but to a woman. Solitaire and Grand Isle both reveal the origin of their names. Unfortunately, however, the origin of Quebec is lost in the place names of the early history of the colony. Nevertheless, it is too goodly thing that names like Riviere-Pistolet, and Riviere-de-Dos-de-Cheval survive."

Of one of the new musical pictures the New York Times this month has the following to say: "Of all the arts music has the strongest hold upon man's mind. He may forget the exact words of a piece of sculpture or a prose passage; the details of a painting will stay with him all his days. More than that; an almost forgotten tune will instantly re-create the mood, the time and the place in which it was formerly heard. Only sounds and smells may thus draw upon the subconscious springs of recollection. So when a picture like 'Alexander's Ragtime Band' brings to the screen a thirty-year procession of Irving Berlin tunes, it will be for most people in the audience a sentimental and journey into times otherwise beyond recall."
