Photographing The Invisible

The photographic camera was not really an invention; it is a copy on a larger scale of the eye. But the camera can see what the eye cannot; man has beaten Nature at her own game.

A clear photograph of the coast of France was recently made from Dover on a day when thick mist made it invisible to the eye. This was done by means of a new plate of British manufacture. It has long been known that there are light waves the eye cannot see. Infra-red waves are too long to be perceived, and ultra violet waves are too short. Infra-red rays penetrate fog with ease and the photograph was made by the use of a screen which shut out all rays but these.

A Royal Message

Equally strange things have been done with ultra violet rays, for with these clear photographs can now be taken of writing invisible to the eye, either because it has been erased or because the ink has completely faded.

Not long ago a traveller in the East acquired an old piece of parchment which was completely blank. It was believed to have contained originally an important communication from King Louis XVI of France, but it had been scraped clean so that it might be used again. It was photographed with ultra violet light by Col. W. R. Mansfield, the hand writing expert and the whole of the letter including the king's signature, came out almost as clearly as though the original ink had been there.

An Old Idea

A portable bed-sitting room that can be set up in fifteen minutes is an invention 5,000 years old, which has come to light from a royal tomb of Egypt, belonging to the Queen of Hetepheres I.

The Harvard-Boston Expedition, which cleared the queen's possessions from her secret tomb, recognized what the strips of gold-encased, decayed wood represented, and bent every effort to salvage the important piece of royal furniture. Dr. George A. Reisner, noted Egyptologist, of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, now reports that the restored canopy has been delivered to the Cairo Museum, where the bed and head rest belonging inside the canopy are already deposited.

The Queen's canopy consisted of a wooden framework 10.5 feet long, over eight feet wide and about seven feet high. When the gold-cased, wooden posts and beams were set up and curtained with fine linen hangings, the Queen had a private and comfortable little room. A bed, armchair, and jewel box furnished the canopied enclosure.—(Fredericton Gleaner.)

MAKING CARS LAST LONGER

It is quite evident that Canadian users of motor cars are making their vehicles last longer than they formerly did. There were 82,559 cars produced in 1931, 8,739 imported and 10,539 exported, so that the apparent consumption was 76,759. Consumption in other years was as follows: 131,234 in 1930, 204,967 in 1929, 203,507 in 1928 and 157,832 in 1927.

WHALES, DEAD OR ALIVE WANTED

Following an appeal made by the Royal Scottish Museum of Edinburgh, Scotland, coastguards along the British coast are keeping a sharp lookout for stranded live or dead whales, marooned porpoises and dead dolphins. When one is found the Museum is wired, and detailed reports sent by mail. The Museum pays the expenses. The Musuem wants the information because of the scientific interest and possible economic importance.

::Persian Balm is irresistibly appealing to all women who appreciate charm and elegance. Its use keeps the complexion always clear and beautiful. Tonic in effect. Stimulates the skin and makes it wonderfully soft-textured. Softens and whitens the hands. Persian Balm is equally invaluable to men as an excellent hair fixative and cooling shaving lotion. Splendid also to protect the tender skin of the child.
