TALES TOLD BY MEN IN THE FIGHTING LINES ON LAND AND ON SEA

ATE WHAT THE GERMANS LEFT

An idea of how the Germans treat their prisoners of war may be gathered from the story told by two soldiers who succeeded in escaping from the enemy's guards, and got to safety after trying and exciting adventures. The story was told by Rifleman D. Brennan and Dempsey, at the 2nd Royal Irish Rifles, who were captured at Ypres.

These two men who went to France on the outbreak of war, participated in the retreat from the outskirts of Paris to Ypres.

Shortly after Christmas, during the fighting near Ypres, they were captured and taken to the further side of Dixmude, where they received scant consideration from their captors. They were forced to eat the German soldiers' leavings, and if nothing was left the prisoners got nothing.

One of the British prisoners asked the a German soldier for a cigarette and received a blow under the jaw. Having determined to escape the men selected a moment when the guard was under the influence of drink, and six made a dash for liberty.

Before they got clear the sentry raised an alarm, the guard turned out, and two of the fugitives were shot down. Then a terrible journey began. For seven days the men crawled along hedgerows, and by roads under the cover of darkness, hiding in hedges and ditches during the day time.

For the whole week they lived on mangold wurzels and ditch water. When the two men landed at Hull every stitch of clothing they wore had to be burned.

A SHELL IN A GENERAL'S HOUSE

An officer of the A. S. C. writes: A German aeroplane has been scattering bombs about, and one aimed at our wagon fell only a few yards away. It damaged two houses, and when I went to see the occupants this morning they were as casual about the injuries done to their property as if a cheap plate had been broken. One woman showed me a piece of shell the size of her forearm that had broken the side of the house down, and she was neither excited nor alarmed. A shell came through the roof of the general's house into a room where three of the servants were having dinner, and beyond spluttering their with putty and bits of brick left them uninjured. These events were by way of celebrating the return of the sun for the first time for some weeks.

I wish I had the transport to take some of the old furniture home. Some of the pieces are interesting historically. As the population is Catholic some of the big cupboards sheltered heretics from their pursuers during the Revolution. I thought that these long straight national roads would have been laid down in the periods just preceding the Revolution by corvées but it appears they are much older. Arthur Young (the writer of the end of the eighteenth century) must have passed down them, and entered into many of the cottages which I am so fond of visiting. These old places hardly deserve the end to which some of them have come.

We are now almost literally hibernating in the old sense, and the vast stretches of country behind the trenches which our troops are occupying prove that we regard those in the trenches merely as outposts whose efforts will tide us over the severe weather until we can rush these enormous reserves into action. Our cavalry may then get the chance of justifying its existence. Every man who has stood the strain of the trenches throughout the winter, if justice be done, ought to get the D. S. O. or D. C. M. He will not be fit to enjoy the thrill of a victorious and rapid advance later on

HOSPITAL CONFIRMATIONS

An Army Scripture reader at Boulogne and Wimereux Military Hospitals writes:

On January 10 the Chaplain-General was here. He held four confirmations, three in the hospitals and one in the English church at Wimereux. In one ward two young soldiers, both with a leg off, were placed side by side, and with the chaplain and myself in attendance the Chaplain-General, in the most informal way, confirmed them. They were in a bad way at the time. They have since improved and returned to England.

Two officers, old soldiers and old men, both with a leg off like the others, and one of them the father of six children, were confirmed under similar conditions in another ward. They are still here, but getting better. Afterwards I took the Chaplain-General to Rifleman _____, Rifle Brigade who two years ago had been confirmed by him in Winchester Garrison Church. He is rather badly wounded, and was delighted with this surprise visit.

He "came to attention" and went on. "I was a 'booky' boy, with a taste for pictures and poetry; used to read Tennyson a lot—and Shelley. Can't stand 'em now. It's all Kipling, Adam Lindsay Gordon and those chaps."

He dreamed a bit and began to mutter Kipling's—
If you're wounded and left on Afghanistan's plains,
And the women come out to cut up what remains,
Jest roll to your rifle and blow out your brains,
And go to your God like a soldier.

"I'm getting bloodthirsty," he began again, after a pause. "True, really! Fought a chap the day I left barracks. We had an argument—about football, I think."
"Used to write topical verses for a newspaper once. It all makes me sick now."
I said I felt something of that. Encouraged, he talked on.
"I find things running through my head like this—and I've never seen a man die."
He said the following in a calm, low voice, half-dreamily again:

ME AN' MY BAYONET.
We've roughed it along from Mons to Bassece,
Me an' my bayonet,
An' often we're thirsty, an' drink to "Our Day."
Me an' my bayonet,
Ie drinks in blood an' me in tea,
An' by God, he's easier fed than me. In the trenches dug by the grey North Sea.

We're covered with blood an' we're cold as death,
Me an' my bayonet,
We're frozen half stiff and there's fog in our breath,
Me an' my bayonet,
An' we lie in the night an' I grip him close,
An' the feel of him's nice an' helps me doze,
While the frost plays the devil with my toes.
We've killed a few an' we'll "do for some more,
Me an' my bayonet,
It's a rush and a thrust, an' a snatch, scream—an' groan,
Me an' my bayonet,
But we only hear our own wild cries, an' we only see the German eyes' An' leave 'em starrin' at the skies.

"Pretty bloodthirsty, isn't it?" He laughed a little grimly. "Do you know, I sometimes think we English ought to better if more of us were like that. Let's learn to hate."
I thought of the men who have paid to be led to Great Britain's call and I half agreed.

MUSIC OF THE BATTLEFIELD.

A Scots Guardsman writes: "As for myself, I am AI out here. This life is a bit thrilling at times, which makes it all the more interesting and breaks the monotony of the wet trenches. The creck and roar of the guns made me a bit nervous at first, but these sounds have become like music to me—the music of the battlefield. And to come face to face with a German, to have him at the point of the bayonet, that's splendid—and he doesn't like it! You must think I am developing into a bloodthirsty ruffian. Perhaps I am. He or other has got to have it, but I'm sure you prefer the German to be hit one rather than your soldier brother."
"I have been in bits of scrimmages of late and prefer the rush and tumble to lying in the trenches. They are a bit wet owing to the heavy rain we have been having lately. But any man who is fit and strong and who is not out here is missing the chance of a life-time."
"If I come out at the end safely I shall have many funny things to tell you. One of our fellows had a narrow squeak the other day. He was taking penny-peeps through his field glasses at the Germans across the way from our trenches when suddenly he rolled over. "Poor chap, he's done for! Got it in the head," he heard the chap next to him say. To our surprise the comrade "done for" came round after a time. "In his hand he still held half of his field glasses; the other half had vanished into thin air. Evidently the bullet had shattered the prism, thus leaving the lenses in position, but without rendering the insensitive man in haki unconscious. He now has a lovely black eye!"

If you were told of a new discovery for the treatment of coughs, colds and bronchitis, as certain in its action on all chest troubles as anti-toxin is on diphtheria, or vaccination on small-pox, wouldn't you feel like giving it a trial? Especially if you could try it for fifty cents!

Peps is the discovery!

Peps are little tablets, neatly wrapped in air and germ-proof silver foil. They contain certain medicinal ingredients, which, when placed upon the tongue, immediately turn into vapour, and are at once breathed down the air passages to the lungs. On their journey, they soothe the inflamed and irritated membranes of the bronchial tubes, the delicate walls of the air passages, and finally enter and carry relief and healing to the capillaries and tiny air sacs in the lung.

In a word, while no liquid or solid can get to the lungs and air passages, these Peps fumes get there direct, and at once commence their work of healing. Peps are entirely distinct from the old-fashioned liquid cough cures, which are merely swallowed into the stomach, and never reach the lungs. Peps treatment of coughs and colds is direct treatment.

If you have not yet tried Peps, cut out this article, write across it the name and date of this paper, and mail it (with 1c. stamp to pay return postage) to Peps Co., Toronto. A free trial packet will then be sent you. All druggists and stores sell Peps at 50c. box.
