OVERLOADED CABINET.

DURING an economic complex in the course of a prolonged and dangerous period of political unbusiness, Premier King admitted that there were too many Cabinet Ministers in Canada. He accordingly announced his intention to reduce the number of Cabinet Ministers and, as a matter of fact, he declined to appoint a successor to Mr. McMurray as Solicitor-General, and abolished the Department of Secretary of State. Of course, there may have been other reasons for this economic stunt. There may have been no feasible successor to the Solicitor-General at the time and the political health of the then Secretary of State was in a precarious condition. Anyway, these two ministries were abolished. But returning political health caused the sick-bed promises to be forgotten. The two ministries were re-established and now the once vacant Cabinet seats are filled and the occupants are drawing their full pay of $10,000 each, besides a seasonal indemnity of $4,000 each.

And now, the Cabinet superfluity to the contrary notwithstanding, it is proposed to establish a new ministry, that of Fisheries, a sort of split ministry, by separating the department of fisheries from that of the marine. This will enable two ministries to grow where only one grew before, a feat which, in some other walks of life, is a test of success.

Now there is a possibility that still another sub-division of this ministry may yet be found necessary. It was pretty generally understood and, it is said, definitely promised that the portfolio of Fisheries was to come to Prince Edward Island and it is known that the Hon. John E. Sinclair has been parting his coat-tails preparatory to taking charge of this portfolio in the Cabinet. Now comes word that Mr. William Duff, recently elected in Antigonish-Guysboro, is slated as the new Minister of Fisheries and it appears that the promise of bringing this honor to that constituency had considerable influence in securing his election.

A NATION OF HOME-OWNERS.

THE OTTAWA JOURNAL says sixty-two of every 100 Canadian families own their homes; only 38 live in rented premises, according to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. The percentage of home-owners is rather surprisingly high. It is highest in Prince Edward Island, where only 19.27 per cent. of families are renters; it is lowest in Quebec province, which is divided almost evenly between owners and tenants—which again is surprising. Probably due to a large proportion of renters in Montreal.

An encouraging inference from the figures is the absence of a class of tenant farmers in the Prairie Provinces. In Saskatchewan, which is more purely agricultural than any other province, three families out of four own their homes. In Alberta the percentage home-owners is 69.37 and in Manitoba 64.77, showing that the proportion of tenants increases in the provinces which have a large urban population. Saskatchewan has the smallest proportion of urban residents, and the lowest percentage of tenant families; Manitoba, in Greater Winnipeg, has almost half the population of the province, and has the highest percentage of tenants on the Prairies. Much public lamentation over their unfortunate state has come from the West in recent years, but in the main from a fairly small class of the Prairie farmers. The agricultural class was not alone in facing the necessity for a more or less painful adjustment to post-war conditions, and agriculture has kept pace in the general economic recovery of the Dominion. The statistics we have quoted show clearly that the Western farmers have maintained faith in themselves and the country through all their trials and tribulations, and most of them still are on their own farms.

ADVERTISING CANADA.

AN attractive pamphlet entitled, "Winter in Canada," has recently been issued by the Intelligence Service, Department of the Interior, Ottawa.

The following extract will give an idea of the scope and purpose of the pamphlet which is artistically illustrated with original drawings: "There are few sights more beautiful than the forest after freshly fallen snow not yet disturbed by the breeze. Great hoods and mantles of white lie upon the rocks and bushes in fantastic shapes and little cedars become majestic domes. This magic fairy-land may last for days in sheltered nooks for the wind does not penetrate the forest depths. They who have seen the 'silver-thaw' or an ice storm in the forest have witnessed one of nature's most beautiful effects. Each little twig and branchlet is sheathed in glassy ice and under the sun's rays the whole tree is decked with many colored sparkling diamonds.

"A strangely beautiful sight is sometimes seen in the early mornings before the sun's warmth is felt, when the night mist has frozen upon every limb and completely enveloped the entire tree in snowy whiteness, not as with falling snow from above but equally above, below and on all sides—a truly magic sight. Vapour, sustains, suspended in the air, too light to fall, will be seen in the early morning light as myriads of dancing, flashing particles of floating ice. This effect can be seen only in northern latitudes where the air is dry and frosty.

"In summer one thinks of nature as clothed in beautiful colors. In winter the snow-covered fields, forest and lakes seem to be shrouded in a great sheet of white." Nature lovers find as much enjoyment in winter scenery as in summer. While naturally the great forest areas in Western and Central Canada possess majestic beauty which is lacking in the more cultivated province, there is much natural winter beauty which too many of us miss. In this province outdoor sports are not as enthusiastically followed as they ought to be. In our ordinary winters there is ample opportunity for snow-shoeing, ski-ing, tobogganning and, quite frequently, skating.

And there are always the trees, possessing a beauty all their own, there is always the sparkling snow, and the life-giving frosty air. It must be admitted that we are largely an indoor people, even the old-fashioned sleighing parties of a few years ago are gone and we stay indoors waiting patiently for the automobile season.

We need some young people's clubs or leaders to reinstate our old-time winter sports.

Notes by the Way

RADICAL reform of the educational system is advocated by Miss Agnes McPhail, M. P. Speaking before a meeting of United Farmers of Alberta at Edmonton recently she strongly condemned the prevailing educational system throughout Canada as a complete failure, obsolete, infected with dry rot and entirely unfit for an agricultural country such as ours. She appealed to the farmers present to lead the way in a nationwide campaign in arousing public sentiment to compel the introduction of new educational structure. "The future of Canada, the reconstruction of our country rests to a large extent with agriculture," she declared, and pointed to what the United Farmers' organization had already achieved "as affording good ground for hope and confidence that Alberta will lead us on to a higher plane of civilization."

No one will claim perfection for our educational system, if such it can be called, varying as it does in different provinces. It has often been objected that from the primary schools to the universities it has tended to influence the sons and daughters of farmers to dislike and forsake the vocation of their parents, but there are many objectors who are not good for much else than making objections, just as there are reformers whose principal quest is for something to reform.

And Miss McPhail, is a politician as every one knows, representing in Parliament a rural riding in Ontario, and supported by the organization of United Farmers in that large Province. It is therefore quite natural that this ambitious lady politician should aspire to lead a new movement for reform in education and begin her propaganda by denouncing the existing order of things. "Start by establishing an experimental school," she says, and embody in the curricula the most revolutionary ideas you can think of." And if necessary, burn the text books.

That Alberta's Education Department really wants to serve the farmer, Miss McPhail believes, and she suggests that they appoint a commission to study the best systems of other countries where genuine efforts have been made to provide for the needs of agriculture. She cited four principles which should be pillars of reformed educational methods. These are: Education for the child, not the system; social and co-operative education; enlarged vision of life in the community and a world-wide outlook. In Ontario she had found those in control of university boards in too many cases were those who benefit by special privilege, the urban, rather than the rural type of mind, and regard any change as radicalism or rebellion."

What there is in these half-political and half educational observations of Miss McPhail we leave our readers to judge. We do not think that the immediate effect of the new movement to start a remodeling of all educational institutions will be very great.

The rather sudden change from mild, or only moderately cold weather to regular January winter temperatures on Wednesday last, doubtless caught many householders more or less unprepared. The long-continued spell of clement elements had given a sense of security that was not safe to rely upon. The change brought with it the small compensation of more work for the plumbers in the city, who, as veritable friends in time of need, had more than the usual number of calls for their services. What is more important is that it gave a loud call to all who enjoy comfortable homes to remember the poor and the Coal Fund.

British India, with 143,174,000 head of cattle, leads the world in total numbers of this live stock. United States is second with 66,506,000 head; the Union of Soviet Republics in Europe has 37,716,700; Argentina, 37,064,850; Germany, 17,326,098; France, 14,024,960; Australia, 13,357,508; Great Britain and Ireland, 12,062,622; and Canada 9,460,836.

SIMPLE TEST ON HEART AND KIDNEYS

About three drops of a salt solution (85 per cent) was injected under the skin in a normal individual, and the little lump which was raised on the skin did not disappear for over an hour. In other words this extra water was not absorbed by the tissues for that length of time.

However where there is any swelling of the feet, ankles, or other parts of the body, it was found that the lump caused by salt solution disappeared in less than an hour, and in some cases the salt solution raised no lump whatever. What is the reason for this? Well the circulation is poor, the tissues need water, and they take it from the nearest source, that is the salt solution that has been injected into the tissues.

What does this mean to the patient or to the physician? Where the heart is beginning to fail somewhat in its work the circulation in the feet, hands and lower part of abdomen is not as rapid as it should be, and the liquid part of the blood gets in between the tissues and remains there. You have seen this sometimes where the ankles swell, and by pressing the end of your finger into the flesh there is a pit or depression left in the puffy like tissue. Now it is a fact that where this swelling or puffiness occurs it is due to deficient heart, or to kidneys that are defective.

In experimenting with the salt solution mentioned above, it was found that where the failure on part of heart and kidneys was severe, that the lump went down rapidly, and in extreme cases the injection of the salt solution raised no lump at all, because the tissues were so hungry for water they absorbed it as quickly as it was injected.

What is the value of this knowledge? That although the time to absorb the salt solution or cause the disappearance of the lump should be an hour in a healthy individual, and any time less than that is not normal, nevertheless unless the disappearance time gets down to twenty minutes or less there is no immediate danger.

This test should be of value in all cases where there is swelling of the parts.

JUST A BABY!

Just a baby, nothing more. Millions have been born before. But this baby strangely seems to have come with golden dreams. And a miracle is wrought—She has changed our every thought.

Just a baby, but the place seems to wear a fairer grace. Gone is all the solemn hue. Rooms and hall and stairway knew. Nothing here is quite the same Since the day the baby came.

Laughter has a sweeter tone. Life itself has richer grown. She has changed and so have I. And this great world tramping by. Busy, heedless as before. Has been changed for evermore.

Just a baby, nothing more. Yet we tip-toe 'cross the floor. Fearful lest the sound we make Shall her time of slumber break. And within her tiny hand Lie the splendors we have planned.

Now beyond our tasks we see All that some day she may be. It with pride our faces glow. She it is all made them so. What is all this boasting for? Just a baby, nothing more.

Lady Byng, wife of the former Governor-General of Canada, is a great admirer of the songs of the Canadian bullfrog. Clyde L. Patch, Curator at the Canadian National Museum, has made it known that while here Lady Byng became much interested in these amphibians. "Before leaving for England Lady Byng expressed to me the desire that she be supplied with hatchings of frogs' eggs, to be placed on her estate, so fond had she become of the song of the frog," Mr. Patch stated.

Did You Ever Stop To Think?

B. D. Chilson, editor of the Hilo (Hawaii) Tribune-Herald, says: "That the small town merchant above all others needs the benefit of advertising, particularly as a means of offsetting the inroads of mail order business and as a means of educating his local folk in the advantages of keeping capital at home—in other words, spending money where it is earned and thus making the local market act as a clearing house in which one's dollar circulates from customer to merchant, to employe and back into local trade again.

The mail order house has its place in trade, however, and is a good regulating factor in prices and a stimulator of competition. That it is not the strangling octopus that some howlers would make us believe, is shown by the fact of prosperous small stores doing business actually contiguous to the walls of the larger concerns.

THESE HOWLERS, IT MAY USUALLY BE OBSERVED, ARE THE VERY ONES WHO SIT ON THEIR HAUNCHES EXPECTING TRADE TO COME TO THEM. AND NEVER BLAZONING THEIR WARES THROUGH THE MEDIUM OF ADVERTISING. THE CONSISTENT, PERSISTENT, INTELLIGENT ADVERTISER OBTAINS RETURNS ON HIS ADVERTISING INVESTMENT WHICH ENABLE HIM TO MAKE A LARGE TURNOVER AT REASONABLE PROFITS AND PLACES HIM IN THE POSITION WHERE THE OTHER FELLOW HAS TO BE THE COMPETITOR.
