The death of Mrs. James Irving, after a long and painful illness occurred recently at her home in Hills River. She and her husband came out from Dumfries, Scotland, about thirty-four years ago. Successful in the world's affairs and useful in the community in a high degree, a happy home was theirs, and the bereavement is shared by all the neighbourhood. Robert Bell of Alberton and Andrew Bell, Hills River are brothers of the deceased and Mrs. Charles Forsythe of Alberton and Mrs. Samuel Metherall Hills River are sisters.

All have heard through the press from time to time during the recent season of the large fish caught by different parties, but without doubt the story of the "best catch" of the season, although the fish were not to be seen on the arrival home of the fishermen, is told by a gentleman closely connected with the management of the Summerside telephone exchange. His story is that during one of his business trips to the western part of the Island he took advantage of the nearness of a celebrated trout stream to try and secure a good catch, which he claims he did, although he was unable to show the fish to corroborate his statements. His reason for not being able to show them is as follows: After returning from the stream he went to the hotel, where he was stopping, and secured from the mistress of the house a box proceeded to pack the fish. During the proceedings of this work the approach of the train was heard and not wanting to miss his passage he picked up the box, said to contain the "large catch" and started to run for the train. After the train started he proceeded to finish the work of properly packing the fish, but behold his astonishment when on removing the cover of the box to find that the fish had disappeared having dropped out of the box through the bottom falling out during his hurried trip from the hotel to the train. The question remains to be solved was it the weight of the fish that forced the bottom out or not? As to this no one knows except the gentleman himself.
