MILKING: TRY IT A NEW WAY

Here's a dairyman's suggestion that is worth taking into consideration by those farmers who are trying to make a success in dairying. It was overheard in the course of a conversation between a couple of farmers at a recent exhibition:

"At milking time only one thought should be uppermost in the milkers mind: get the milk, get it quickly and get it all. A cow becomes excited at harsh words and holds her milk. Dont forget for a second that you are milking. A cows teat is not a baseball on which to practice a certain grip, nor a baseball bat where the greatest pressure should come at the small end of the hand. The pressure of milking should begin between the folds of the index fingers. The other fingers should follow in succession downwards. The reverse of this not only does get the milk but forces it back into the udder. This process if kept up constantly will ruin the best cow in several months. The richest milk comes last. The first drawn may test less than 1 per cent., the last may test over 6 per cent. We must get it all and dare not be careless.'

INDUSTRIES DIE OUT.

New Inventions Crushing Out Once Flourishing Trades.

In discussing the decadence of many industries that were at one time flourishing, an English writer says that in London at least there are no more pattern-makers. The widow of the last survivor of this once flourishing industry was placed some years ago upon the pension list of one of the old Livery Guilds.

New methods, new inventions are always crushing out old industries and especially handicrafts. The motor has done a deal to destroy the many industries connected with riding and driving. Not long ago, a man in trouble for not paying a debt told the magistrate that he was a maker of whip lashes, but that his trade was practically dead.

The forging by hand of hard steel stirrups which used to be a flourishing industry is nearly dead. It was work which required great skill, a trade which took a lifetime to learn properly. It is doubtful if there are a dozen men left in England who are capable of forging a steel stirrup out of a rough bar of steel.

The old-time cooper, the man who made barrels by hand, is well-nigh extinct. So, too, is the hand-loom weaver. In both these handicrafts machinery has superseded the older methods.

Instead of thatching their stacks, farmers usually throw a tarpaulin over them or build them under a roof of galvanized iron.

The thatcher was once one of the most important and best paid of rustic artificers. To-day you may search many villages before you would fine one capable of doing thatching. Indeed, in Lincolnshire, where not so long ago all cottages were reedthatched, it was estimated recently that there are only four expert reedthatchers left.

Perth, Stirling and Dundee were formerly centres of the Scottish pistol-making industry. Scottish pistols were famous as far back as 1515, and were exported to France and elsewhere. There were at one time no fewer than seventy-eight well-known and famous Scottish pistol-makers.

This trade is absolutely dead. The United States revolver killed the Scottish pistol, and the only examples of this interesting art are now to be seen in museums.

Exodus to United States

Mr. Meighen took up a recent utterance of Hon. Ernest Lapointe, as to waste and graft, and declared that despite the fact that the Liberals were in possession of the books of the country during the last two years they had not been able to discover one dollar of waste or one dollar of dishonesty during the previous administration.

Again coming to taxes Mr. Meighen said that the country could not maintain a level of taxation higher than the United States and still hold its own. "We can't maintain a cost of living higher than that of the United States and hold our own sons and daughters in this Canada," he said.

Promises made by Liberal speakers in by-elections were discussed by Mr. Meighen who stated that a wharf provided in North Essex had been placed at a point where no shipments had ever been made except of illicit whiskey to the United States.

Addressing the meeeting after Mr. Meighen, Hon. Rodolphe Monty, former Secretary of State in the Meighen administration, stated that the Liberals had promised that the Canadian National Railways would be returned to private ownership. Instead of this, he declared that they began by dismissing the former board of commissioners of railway and had appointed Sir Henry Thornton "a foreigner at a salary of $50,000 a year, whose first undertaking was to acquire his private railway car at a cost of $98,000."

"Further he said the Liberals had purchased the Scribe Hotel in Paris, through an American syndicate, the identity of whose members were unknown to the people of Canada. He blamed the government for appointing a Roumanian as an agent for the Canadian National Railways in Paris and for ordering 3600 railway cars at Philadelphia when this order could he said, have been placed in Canada, for the benefit of Canadian firms and workers.

WHEN MUSSOLINI, DICTATOR OF ITALY, WAS ONLY A "BUCK" PRIVATE

Mussolini was only a buck in the World war of 1916.

Alfredo Carminati, the sergeantmajor who first drilled the premier of Italy, tells the following interesting facts about him as a soldier.

Carminati is now a hotel waiter in England.

"I had heard of Mussolini," said Carminati, "but only as a Socialist orator in the streets of Milan. You can imagine my surprise when one morning in the winter of 1916 Mussolini and his Socialist friend Coreidoni presented themselves at the barracks at Cassolnovo and said they wished to volunteer for the Italian army.

"It was my duty to drill him.

"It was quickly apparent that Mussolini was a born soldier. Although he had preached Socialism in the streets of Milan, he shed his extreme views as soon as he donned the uniform of an Italian buck private. His cry was, 'Now boys, get on with it.'

"He was the oldest member of the battalion, and although only a private, his magic influence soon made itself felt. 'One of these days,' said a member of the battalion to me, 'that chap Mussolini will be a great man in Italy.' History has proved how accurate the prophecy was.

"As an enlisted man he was extremely popular, but he was always consumed with the desire to get into the fighting line. He and Coreidoni went into action together. Poor Coreidoni was killed by a bomb; Mussolini escaped with a wound in the arm.

"Althogether Mussolini was wounded 14 times; his one anxiety when in hospital was to get fit and well again, so that he could rejoin the fighting line.

"His activity knew no bounds. He was up like a shot with the bugle at 6:30 a.m., and he saw that his comrades were up as well. I understand that his passion for early rising has clung to him, for my friends in Italy tell me he is up at daybreak and expects his staff to be ready for him at 8:30 every morning.

"Every fellowfighter trusted and respected him and listened with awe to his tales of a mighter Italy.

"His motto was always 'My Country First.'"

In the little, devastated village of Erouey, near Soissons, among other contractors engaged in the work of rehabilitating the devastated region there is a modest Italian named Alfredo Mussolini.

He is a full brother of Italy's premier. Alfredo appeared in the devastated region a few months after the armistice was signed and since then has been carrying on this work and living in a simple manner. He is extremely popular with his workmen, whose fare he shares. He gives no evidence of coveting his brother's fortunes.

DEFEAT OF TORIES IN ENGLAND A BLOW TO ULSTER UNIONISTS

Diehards, However, Did Not Get Baldwin's Support for Plans to Break Treaty—Party Trying to Split Labor Vote

By WILLIAM HASSETT
Public Ledger Foreign Service

Copyright, 1924, by the Charlottetown Guardian

BELFAST, Jan. 26.—The defeat of the Tory Party in England has brought deep gloom to the party's Unionist adherents in Northern Ireland.

The Irish Unionists are not merely Tories. They are diehards of the deepest dye. They represent the privileged ascendancy, of which the Labor Party is the sworn enemy, and for whom the capital levy—to say nothing of the other principles of the Labor-Socialist Party—is a terror by day and night.

Likewise the Irish Unionists abhor and are abhorred by both Mr. Lloyd George and Mr. Asquith. Lloyd George has never been forgiven for the Free State treaty, with its boundary provision, which has only to be enforced when huge slices will be cut out of the Northern Government area. Mr. Asquith, in his turn, has been execrated ever since his proposal of the pre-war Home Rule Bill, which sent Ulster drilling and turned the Northern area into an armed camp determined upon resisting by force the rest of the British Empire and the acts of its Parliament.

In addition there are two members of the former Lloyd George Coalition Government—Lord Birkenhead and Austen Chamberlain—whose inclusion in the Baldwin Government was violently opposed by Ulster Unionists who never forgave any member of the Government which brought about the treaty settlement with the Free State. Some rather unimportant Ulster politicians, with more zeal than discretion, openly boasted during the late campaign that they were responsible for the exclusion of these two leaders. There, then, are two more personalities with good memories whom Ulster cannot rely upon now in her hour of need.

Baldwin Stands by Treaty

Mr. Baldwin, although naturally sympathetic toward his Irish Unionist supporters, had already announced that he stood by the letter and the spirit of the Free State treaty. If the treaty is enforced, so far as the boundary is concerned, Ulster's case is lost. We have seen what the situation was in Tyrone and Fermanagh. There are likewise Nationalist majorities in South Down and South Armagh, both now in the northern area. Londonderry is another contested area, and all over the six countries are pockets of Catholic Nationalists demanding annexation to the Free State, while other pockets of Protestant Unionists are demanding the maintenance of their present status under Baitain—a truly complicated, vexatious and extremely inflammatory situation, which may break out any moment with dire consequences.

President Cosgrave and the Free State, for their part, have reiterated for more than a year that they have no favors to ask. Their position is that the treaty provision for a Boundary Commission and a plebiscite in which the people affected may register their preference, either for the Free State or for the Northern Government, must be enforced.

They likewise have reiterated that they will not accept less. And they can point to the awful sacrifices the Free State has made in blood, treasure and a devastated countryside because their Government enforced the treaty provision for an oath of allegiance to the King as a justification of their demand for enforcing all the clauses of the treaty. The Free State appointed Prof. John MacNeill as its boundary commissioner six months ago. It has been waiting even since for the Northern Government and the British Government to name their members.

Whatever else may be said of the extraordinary religious prejudice to which it is necessary so often to recur, it has very useful purposes in the hands of scheming politicians. Lord Carson saw this, and is organizing a Unionist-Labor organization, which should have the effect of splitting the Labor vote and of keeping the selection of Labor candidates in the hands of the old Unionist Party. There was just a rift in the ascendancy lute in the late campaign, when one Independent Labor candidate made a phenomenal run against an official Unionist candidate. It was considered a significant thing that a Labor candidate could come within 3000 of winning in a carefully gerrymandered Unionist district.

TORONTO, Jan. 28. (Canadian Press.) Historical significance is attached to a typewriter which was shipped from this city to Mrs. Milton Galle in Texas. It was used by her son, Milton Galle, on the Wrangel Island Expedition, and was one of the relics found by the Noice Expedition when they discovered Ada Blackjack stranded on the Island—the only survivor of the heroic little band. It was used by the Eskimo woman when she wrote her diary. Harold Noice, leader of the relief expedition which went out in 1923, which, it will be recalled, discovered that Allan Crawford of Toronto and two companions were lost, and another member of the earlier expedition died on the island, brought the typewriter among other effects, that were found with Ada Blackjack.

A BRILLIANT

WINNIPEG, Jan. 28, (Canadian Press).—"It is heavy work for a woman modelling on a large piece. My studio ceiling was 18 ft. high, and the figure of my Canadian Soldier just reached the ceiling. For weeks I lived on step-ladders." So said Mrs. Hillard Taylor, the Winnipeg sculptress, who has just returned from London, where she has been at work on a bronze bust of the Indian Chief Peguis, which will be set up this spring in Kildonan Park. Speaking of her design for the Soldiers Relatives' Memorial, which stands on the Parliament grounds she said:

"I wanted the statue to be all-British. Not only is it of all British workmanship, but all the handicraft work was done by returned soldiers. The workmen in my studio and in the foundry were returned men. My model was a soldier who had also been through the South African War. He had posed for war subjects for many of London's leading artists, and he was very proud of his complete war equipment, especially his "boots," she explained. "His boots had been through Vimy, he told us proudly, and as model for many war memorials, reproductions of these same boots had gone to India and many other parts of the Empire as well as coming here to Canada."

A PRACTICAL

TORONTO, Jan. 28., (Canadian Press.)—Rev. John McNeill, pastor of Walmer Road Baptist Church, is a believer in practical Christianity. The leaflet issued by his church, advises women to "do spring cleaning now, and help out the unemployed. We have a painter and paperhanger on our lists."

A CHILD'S

DUNDALK, Ont., Jan. 24, (Canadian Press.)—While little scarlet fever exists here, Dr. F. Martin found himself suddenly losing all his practice. For two days no one would come near his house. Mystified, he made enquiries and discovered that his small daughter Betty, had taken matters into her own hands and put a quarantine card in the window, announcing "Scarlet Fever Here."

WOMEN ASSIST

VANCOUVER, Jan. 28, (Canadian Press).—Mrs. R. J. Sprott, director of the vancouver Women's Building Limited, in a message addressed to Vancouver business men, points out that organized womanhood of Vancouver, is not playing a selfish role in seeking the cooperation of business men in the drive for $25,000, now being carried on in the city. All the leading women's socities are behind her. "Women are very brave in asking for funds to assist in the various undertakings of their separate organizations," Mrs. Sprott says, "but when it comes to asking the city to assist them in giving these organizations a central and permanent home, they are unduly honest. The centralisation of these clubs will eliminate much of the over-lapping, now impossible to avoid, in that it will make for better co-operation."

HOW TO MAKE THOUGH MEAT TENDER

One way to make a tough piece of meat tender is to sear it on all sides in a hot pan or to plunge it in boiling water. The meat is then put in a covered container with little water and simmered, not boiled until it is tender.

Another way to make meat tender is to immerse it and let it stand for several hours in a mixture of salad-oil and vinegar before cooking, using two parts of oil to one of vinegar.

A third method is to cook it in tomato-juice instead of water.

A fourth is to grind it and add a small quantity of fat, as in making hamburger steak.

Perhaps the best way of all is to cook it in a pressure cooker. This takes from one to one and three-quarter hours under ten pounds pressure, according to the size and toughness of the cut of meat.

LAND AND SEA CABLE FROM ENGLAND TO INDIA

Cables are not always laid under water, as is demonstrated by the unique cable which runs from Manchester, England, under the channel to France, overland through France, Germany, Poland, Russia and Persia to the port of Karachi, on the Indian Ocean. It is one of the longest overland cables in the world, and has just recently been put once more into use, after the damages it sustained during the hostilities in Europe.

ORIGIN OF THE CUSTOM.

As to the origin of this custom, practically no information can be gleaned from the people themselves. To all enquiries on this point they usually give a negative reply and appear in addition suspicious and unwilling to discuss the subject with strangers. I was fortunate, however, in obtaining from a resident of the district the following narrative which is current among the natives respecting the origin of this custom. The tale is mythical, of course, and truly Indian in its conception:

Many years ago, in the days of their ancestors, there lived in this part of India a mighty King, who had an only child—a daughter. So beautiful was she and so good that the people called her Chand Bibi—because her face was as bright and as fair as the harvest moon at its full. The fame of her beauty spread to lands far and wide, and kings and princes sent costly presents to her father, asking his daughter's hand in marriage. But to one and all alike Chand Bibi sent a curt refusal.

Now it happened that Chand Bibi loved her cousin, but because of his poverty the King would not consent to her marriage, and he had her lover driven from the city. But when the moon was young the lovers met by stealth, as lovers will, and in the fullness of time a son was born. Then the King was furious and he had his daughter, her lover and child driven from the country, but after a while, fearing the child might grow up and wrest the kingdom from him, he sent his soldiers with orders to kill the child and his father and to bring his daughter back.

In the meantime Chand Bibi, her husband and child had taken refuge with the people and worked daily in the fields, leaving their little son in the charge of an old woman. Then one day news came that the soldiers were advancing and every mother, taking her child, fled to the forest for safety, but because of the wailing of the children the soldiers easily found them and every male child was put to death.

Chand Bibi had fled deeper into the woods and, fearing that the wailing of her child should attract the soldiers to her, prayed to the Goddes Naini for help. (To those unacquainted with the folklore of this part of India, it will be interesting to learn that the hill station at Naini Tal takes its name from the tal or lake which is supposed to be the habitation of the water Goddness Naini, and it will be remembered that till quite recently, it was the custom for religious fanatics to cast themselves into the lake to propitiate the Goddess).

Pitying the mother's distress and wishing to spare the child, the Goddess appeared to Chand Bibi and directed her to place the child on the ground. She then touched the hill-side and immediately a stream of water burst forth, falling directly on the head of the child, lulling it to sleep.

Such is the traditional origin of this custom and to this day it is used by the hill people for putting their children to sleep.

THE KING WHO CEASED TO SMILE

(By Dominion News Service.)

LONDON, Jan. 28.—Once more British schoolboys have provided a hearty laugh by their unconscious humor. The "howlers" quoted in the "University Correspondent" are as delightful as ever.

Mistakes in history, geography, grammar, and literature are not always humorous, merely because they are anachronisms, but are often based upon the misunderstanding of a word.

"Bearded like the pard", means with a beard like a clergyman.

The inflammability of the Pope was proclaimed in the Vatican decrees.

There is a real pun in the following play on words, which one schoolboy made. Asked "Where do we find mangoes? he answered, "Where woman goes."

Piece of hitherto unknown history from the juvenile mind, include these statements:

Bunyan was the inventors of the Nonconformist religion, and also wrote the Pilgrims' Chorus.

In 1620 the Pilgrims crossed the ocean, which is known as the Pilgrim's Progress.

Charles I. was going to marry the infanta of Spain. He went to see her, and Shakespeare says, he never smiled again.

During the war of American Independence, Lord Northcliffe wisely gave the Irish Volunteers Home Rule.

Account of the Feudal System—William the Conqueror was thrown from his home, and wounded in the Feudal System and died of it.

Of the funny mistakes in foreign translation, these take some beating:

Tout a fait.—All on the fake.

Joie de vivre.—Whiskey.

Expertus vacuum.—An expert in cows.

Oxford and Cambridge will be flattered to know that "An undergraduate is (1) a person not up to the mark, and (2) a lower class of school."

Listeners-in will also be interested to learn that "Marconi is used to make delicious puddings."

Among the political howlers are:

The British Constitution is a sound one, but on account of its insolent position, it suffers from fogs.

We are confronted with a choice between Free Trade and Detection

How true is this fragment from a schoolboy's essay: "When walking the motorist is a nuisance, but when riding the pedestrian is too often in the way."

But it is when we come to the 17 science, that educationists must shout for help. Tolstoi, it appears, invented the X-rays by accident, and "geometry teaches us to bisect angels."
