SIR EDWARD ELGAR.

The career of Sir Edward Elgar, the English composer who recently came to this country with the Sheffield choir, has been an extraordinary one, says the Catholic Press, of Sydney, Australia.

"As a boy in Worcester, where he was born in 1857, he was without money and influence and was cut off from the musical world. But there were books, and he and one or two other boys, who met almost daily, were won't to talk of things which were far outside the humdrum philosophy of the old cathedral city's life.

"Elgar was often jokingly said that the only music lesson he ever got was one given to him by his father when he was eight years old. The boy was sitting one day at the table with a piece of paper on which he had ruled some lines.

"'What are you doing?' said Elgar senior.

"'Writing music was the reply.

"'Well, don't you know that music is written on five lines, not four lines?' was the father's comment, on seeing that his little son (doubtless having seen some Gregorian music on four lines) had only ruled four lines on his piece of paper.

"If his boyhood had been spent in a more musical centre doubtless Elgar would have been made a prodigy, for at 15 he was writing music and before that age was a good player on the organ and violin.

"In a way this exclusion from the musical world in earlier life has made him the individual force in music that he is, for his genius was free to mature unhindred by outside influences. But it meant twenty years work, with scarcely any recognition till the end of that time.

"He has always been an erratic worker. He may do nothing for months at a time. Then when the impulse seizes him he works day and night. At the first glance he would not be taken for a musician. He despises the 'traditional trappings'—the long hair, the velvet coat, the flowing tie. With his closely cut iron grey hair and his military looking mustache you would probably set Elgar down as a retired colonel or a distinguished lawyer or politician—anything in fact but a composer.

"Apart from his great musical gifts, Elgar has a remarkable personality, and as a matter of fact there never was a composer who talked less about his work. You might chat with him for hours and if you did not know would never suspect

"On science, politics, literature and other subjects, he has many things to say that are worth the saying, but he has a special aversion to talking shop about music, and not a few people have met with unmistakable rebuffs when they have tried to get his views on certain musical questions.

Elgar has the gift of attracting people. He is gifted with a delightful vein of humor and is never so happy as when he is telling or listening to a good joke. Many an orchestral player can tell you of his humor at rehearsals and could also tell you of scanting remarks when things go wrong, for he is somewhat quick tempered and severe on incompetence.

"He likes a country life. For years he lived on the beautiful Malvera Hills and now has a house in a charming spot on the outskirts of Hereford Town. He has no hobbies, but is clever at a good many things. Like Caruso, he is gifted with the pencil and is an excellent caricaturist. Some time ago chemistry took up some of his spare time. But now, apart from his work and social relaxation, his time is spent in the country, for which he has always had a passionate fondness, and golf is almost his only relaxation."

THE USEFUL TURKEY.

The turkey is the only specimen of the native fauna of America which has ever been reduced to domestication. The deer, the antelope, the lordly bison and the many birds which are used for food have all remained untamed, or have disappeared from the face of the earth, with the exception of the turkey.

Just when or how this bird was reduced to subjection to man is now unknown. Even in name it is credited to an Asiatic country. The name probably came through the way the bird was introduced into England. It is supposed to have come by way of Spain, and was called a Turkish bird because of a nation that it was introduced into Spain by the Moors, who, in the common language of England at that time, were called Turks. From Turkish fowl to Turkey as a specific name was not a long step, and instead of bearing a name indicative of its origin, this noble bird to this day carries the name of a half-civilized Asiatic country.

The original wild turkey from which our domestic breeds have descended was a notable bird, strong of leg and wing, ranging the forests in large flocks and attaining great weights. The bronze turkey of today retains the characteristics of the wild bird most completely.

Since this bird was subjugated and subdued to the use of man it has broken into several varieties: Bronze, Narragansett, White Bluff, Black Slate. Of these the Bronze and the White far outnumber all others combined.

The adult bronze turkey male weighs thirty-six pounds and the adule female twenty pounds. This is the most popular variety we have and grows more popular as time passes. Of all our domestic fowls the bronze turkey is the most beautiful, as far as the color of the plumage is concerned. Good specimens have a broonze lustre on the plumage of the males in breast and neck and upper part of the back which resembles highly burnished copper with greenish and golden reflections.

The female is not so brightly colored, her predominating colors being black and dull white. This variety is very hardy and has considerable wild blood of recent crossings in it, making it the nearest akin to the regular wild bird of any of the varieties.

The Narragansett turkey is not quite so large as the bronze, and is black and greyish white in color, making it a much lighter-colored bird.

Turkeys are more creatures of habit than any other of our feathered fowl; yet, while they will roam over the prarie during the day in search of food, they will also come home at night, if one will make a practice of feeding them, however lightly. We have never been troubled by them staying away at night, for as soon as they return, about sunset, we immediately take a dish of grain and they follow us straight into their house, knowing they will receive a small ration of the food.—M. P.

A SPENDID EXAMPLE

A father has commenced the purchase of a Canadian Government Annuity for his son of 20 under an agreement with the son that he is to bear a portion of the expense until he, the son, is able to assume the hole payment of $50 a year, which is the amount required to be paid from 20 to 60 for 40 years to secure for the son at sixty an Annuity of $507.69. It will be seen that the total payments will amount to $2,000, and that the return each year will be over one-fourth of this amount so long as the son lives after he attains the age of 60. If he dies before the Annuity is due, all his payments with 3 per cent compound interest up to the time of his death will be refunded to his legal representatives.

| If he died at | | |
|---|---|---|
| 30 | they would receive | $ 590.00 |
| 35 | " " " | 957.85 |
| 40 | " " " | 1,383.80 |
| 45 | " " " | 1,877.65 |
| 50 | " " " | 2,450.00 |
| 55 | " " " | 3,113.80 |
| 60 | " " " | 3,883.15 |

Full particulars of this excellent scheme may be had on application to the Superintendent of Canadian Government Annuities, Ottawa, to whom letters go free of postage.

LIFE ON THE FARM.

The question why the agricultural laborer deprives so little enjoyment from his beautiful surroundings has been asked in England, and Jack London's answer accepted: It is because he has become a "work beast," his energy being exhausted by toil and his individuality not being called into play. Two exceptions are found, namely, the woodlanders and the shepherds. These are said to "take the deepest interest in the beautiful, strenuous life that surrounds them."

A FIT OF THE BLUES.

There are certain individuals who seem to take pride in the fact that they are the slaves of their moods, especially of their dark ones. They will tell you with a resignation that touches complacency that they are subject to "black flies" or "the blues" or "days of melancholia" or whatever may be the pet phrase for their deplorable lapses from the normal. Such people never seem to realize that these moods are only another outward and visible sign of an inward disgrace and that unhealtny minds are rarely found in healthy bodies.

It is a hard saying, but "the blues" may generally be traced to one or both of two horrid qualities—greed and laziness. Nine times out of ten the low spirited person is suffering from intoxication—from too little attention paid to elimination or to proper exercises.

The human mechanism can take care of only a certain amount of food. After that point has been passed it seems to turn sullen in its efforts to ignore what it cannot help, and although it is a wonderfully conducted chemical laboratory up to the limit of its own needs it is not at all amiable about working overtime. The result is that all superfluous products sent to it are permitted to lie round and become poisonous. This poison is promptly taken up by the blood and carried to all parts of the body including the brain. The brain, which needs a plentiful supply to clean blood to enable it to do its thinking is naturally indignant at finding poor and impure blood supplied to it, and although not actually going on strike, it refuses to be either pleasant or reasonable.

You who read this are perhaps nineteen or twenty and under the impression that the condition described is an inseparable part of the "artistic" or "poetical" and that a mind capable of making its owner so uncomfortable must be a great mind. You are in error. When there is a riot in the palace even the king upon his throne is made miserable. If you are the victim of recurring fits of depression rest assured that you are sacrificing the greater to the lesser, and the reason for your trouble is to be traced to some mismanagement of the daily regime. It is possible that you must conquer your pet weakness—and for some of us even a pound of candy can harbor a thousand "blue devils."

THE LAST CANADIAN DUEL.

The following account of what was probably the last Canadian duel, is reprinted from the Quebec Pilot of May 11, 1861:

"The telegraph brings us the melancholy intelligence that two gentlemen, one a minister of the Crown, and both of them members of our legislature, left their duties and Quebec for the other side of the line, to consummate on a foreign soil what would in this Province have rendered them amenable to the law, and probably resulted in their being severely punished. Fortunately the affair turned out something like the bombardment of Fort Sumpter, the pistols were fired, and the powder and smoke expended, but neither of the combatants was hurt. Dame Rumor is cruel enough to say that the second of one of the parties, in dread of the consequences, forgot to bring the balls with him, and that the shot used on the occasion were hard peas. The cause of the recontre is variously stated; but the Hon Mr Dessaulles was the challenger. the Hon Mr Morin the challenged. We have not heard if the parties declared themselves satisfied before they left the ground, but they certainly ought to have done it. Mr Morin, being the Solicitor-General, it would be needless to ask him to look to the matter, and to direct the attention of the Crown prosecutor of this district to the facts. Nor do we see how Mr Johnson very well could submit the case to the cognizance of the next Grand Jury to be empannelled. But there can be no question that the example of these gentlemen is a very bad one, and will be fraught with the worst of consequences. But it shows after all, that the age of chivalry is not dead yet, and that the code of honor, almost everywhere else repudiated, is fully recognized here. What a great people we are, and what mighty things may not be expected of us! Only to think of these two fighting with pistols, and fighting in such an innocent, loveable way. The practice it must be allowed, was Yankee, but it probably answered as well as the ancient and more deadly way of settling these affairs. After fighting such a duel, Messrs Dessaulles and Morin must never say die."

THE CULTIVATION OF CLOVES.

Cloves are now cultivated in many of the tropical regions of the earth.

A clove-tree begins to bear at the age of ten years, and continues until it reaches the age of seventy-five years. There are two crops a year, one in June and another in December.

The tree is an evergreen, and grows from forty to fifty feet high, with large oblong leaves and crimson flowers at the end of small branches in clusters of from ten to twenty. The tree belongs to the same botanical order as the guava. The cloves, which are the undeveloped buds, are at first white, then light green, and at the time of gathering bright red.

Pieces of white cloth are spread under the trees at harvesting-time, and the branches are beaten gently with bamboo sticks until the cloves drop. They are dried in the sun, being tossed about daily until they attain the rich dark color that proclaims them ready for shipment.

In this country and England cloves are used almost wholly as a condiment, but in France they are employed largely in the manufacture of certain liquors, and to some extent they are used in medicine on account of their tonic properties.

HE ENDORSED IT.

J. Pierpont Morgan, at a recent diocesan convention in New York, amused a group of clergymen with a story of a minister.

"He was as innocent, this good man, of financial matters," said Mr. Morgan, "as the average financier is ignorant of matters ecclesiastical.

"He once received a check—the first he had ever got in his life—and took it to the bank for payment.

"'But you must endorse the check,' said the paying teller, returning it through his little window.

"'Endorse it?' said the old minister in a puzzled tone.

"'Yes, of course. It must be endorsed on the back.'

"'I see said the minister, and turning the check over, he wrote across the back of it:

"'I heartily endorse this check.'"

The management intend holding their annual race meeting on the above date. There will be the following classes:—

Telephone Securities

Are a most satisfactory form of investment.

The Express Company, the freight carrier, the post office, the telegraph and the telephone all have their part to perform in the economy of transmission All are necessary every day utilities.

The telephone in carrying human speech is one of the greatest factors in every day business life and is also making noticeable headway in the home. These points are evident to everybody who has looked into the subject at all.

Depressions in trade have very little effect upon the business of the telephone companies and for this reason their earnings are of a staple nature and are therefore not subject to large fluctuations as are those of industrial and other concerns.

In recent years there has arisen a very active inquiry from investors for the securities of Telephone Companies having favorable franchises, good prospects and capable management.

We offer for sale in lots to suit purchasers, a block of Trinidad Consolidated Telephones 6 p. c. Bonds. This Company has an exclusive franchise and its net earnings show a steady increase.

Price of bonds and full particulars upon application.
