S. P. C. A. Weekly Column

H.W. MacLean, S.P.C.A. inspector reports that he has, this week, made routine inspection of horses on the Square, and in livery stable. Responded to 14 calls to dispatch or treat cats, which were suffering from quinsitis (diagnosed by a veterinarian) in most of these cases the cats had to be humanely dispatched, though a few responded to Mr. MacLean's treatment, and recovered. Four dogs were picked up, two dispatched, one was sent to a home in the country and one Mr. MacLean has at his home. The last named dog is a female chow, light tan in color, which was starved. This dog has been advertised and Mr. MacLean is trying to get in touch with the owner. Each day the S.P.C.A. inspector makes his rounds, seeing that horses left standing are warmly rugged, that they are properly shod, that harness is comfortable and not ill fitting, checks drivers who nag and jerk horses' mouths, who drive them at too fast a pace, and who overload truck horses.

During the first part of the storm Thursday afternoon, when one of Inspector MacLean's boys arrived home from school, he discovered he had lost a book. Taking one of the dogs with him, he started back through the deep snow to look for it. The dog bounded ahead, and before the boy had gone very far, returned with the book in his mouth. Just an accident, but it shows how animals understand when you are kind to them. This particular dog is one of several "dog boarders" Mr. MacLean has, and has not been long in the family, but already responded to the kindness and understanding of his new master, and in the only way he can, does his "bit" to repay.

News Briefs From P. W. C.

BY CHARLES E. MACARTHUR

The first meeting of the boxing classes was held in the auditorium of Prince of Wales College on Saturday, February 12th. The classes are under the careful supervision of Prof. William Redzie. Mr. Redzie gave a very instructive address about this sport and it is hoped that all students participating will take the matter seriously.

Those students taking the "Fisherman's Course" at Saint Dunstan's University have challenged the agricultural students at Prince of Wales College to a friendly game of hockey to be played at the S. D. U. rink some night this week. The agricultural students have accepted the challenge.

Because of the inclement weather, the social which was to be held in the Hearz Memorial Hall on Thursday evening, February 10th, was postponed until further notice.

The second and third year volleyball teams played three fast games on Saturday. The first years won the first game and the second years won the second game. Because of the absence of several players from both teams in the final game, this one was credited to neither team.

"Resolved that the styles in ladies' clothing has improved through the ages" was the subject of Section C's debate on Thursday. Pro side speakers were James Burnett, Doris MacDonald and Connie Colwill; con side: Harold Stewart, Douglas Gordon and Edna Wigmore. The critic was Beatrice Blanchard. The vote ended 23-18 in favor of the con side.

Today the 3rd year hockey team played a game with 2nd year B at the Upper Queen Street rink. This game will no doubt be exciting and all hockey fans should not miss it.

Last week's regular Sunday evening sing-song was held in the Baptist Church last night, February 13th. John Carson, P. W. C. student, was the speaker for the evening.

A Scout group has been organized in Prince of Wales College under supervision of Commissioner Warren and assistant G. Gordon Hyde. A class of about fifteen has enrolled. This class has been divided into two patrols, known as the Wolf patrol under the leadership of Arthur Reynolds, and the Crow patrol under Allister MacDonald. A meeting of the group is held every Saturday at 2 p.m. All students interested are cordially invited to attend.

A large number of P. W. C. students attended the dance held at The monthly meeting of the Association board of directors was held on Monday evening with a good attendance. Reports were presented by Religious and World Service, social, physical and financial committees. A house party for senior members and their ladies will be held in the Y.M.C.A. building on Friday, February 25th. Mr. J. W. Boulier is chairman of a committee which is sponsoring an auction sale of contributed articles of various kinds about the end of March, in aid of the Association.

The Hobbies Exhibition board of directors met during the week, furthering its plans for the exhibition on April 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th and 9th.

Mr. G. Claude Smith left Wednesday morning to attend the annual meeting of the Canadian Y.M.C.A. National Council which is being held in the General Brock Hotel, Niagara Falls, Ont.

The Y's Men's Club of the Association conducted a successful rummage sale Saturday evening in the Social Room of the building. Details of the arrangements were in charge of Y's Man Geo. Patterson and an active committee of club members.

Sponsored by the Hobbies Exhibition board of directors, a jolly well-attended young people's St. Valentine's dance was held in the Association gymnasium Saturday evening from nine to eleven-thirty. Patrons were Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Curran and Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Lawson. Suitable decorations gave atmosphere to the occasion and much enjoyed orchestra music was provided by Miss Thelma Teed, Miss Thelma Burns, Mr. G. Camp, and Mr. Cecil Santry.

The Y.M.C.A. Saturday night, sponsored by the 1938 Hobbies Board.

We, the students of Prince of Wales College, extend our deepest sympathy to Miss Edith Hugh, because of the serious illness of her mother.

Some New Ideas But Custom Old For Valentines

ANCIENTS HAD THEIR SYSTEM OF CELEBRATION BUT THE GIRLS NO EQUAL RIGHTS THOSE DAYS.

(By The Canadian Press)

Old customs die hard. The sentimental effusion of Victorian days may be out-of-date as far as Miss Canada 1938 is concerned, but the modern Lochinvar will find her as flattered as ever on St. Valentine's Day when he sends his more sophisticated substitute for the old-time "Sweetheart, will you be my Valentine?"

They say some form of love-making has been associated with Feb. 14 for at least 1,608 years but if tradition means anything the male had all the say in those older days. According to musty legend the Romans observed the feast of the "peralta" in honor of Pan and Juno on Feb. 14 and the boys chose their partners by lot.

The connect'ion between St. Valentine and the custom of exchanging love-letters is rather obscure. The saint was put to death in 270 A. D. on the eve of the Lupercalian Feast. With the growth of Christianity, it is believed in some quarters, the feast became merged in the Christian observance of St. Valentine's Day.

Revered for his efforts to ameliorate the sufferings of Christians at the hands of Emperor Claudius II, St. Valentine was also known for his kindness and love for children.

Wh.4 Pepsys Knew

Samuel Pepys in his famous Diary has a lot to say about St. Valentine's Day custom: in 17th-century England. The old idea of choosing by lot persisted but it had become a fanciful diversion in which married as well as single persons participated. It was expensive, too, the men apparently being expected to send gifts to their Valentines.

The flowery-versed cards, according to Pepys, appeared first about 1667. He wrote: "I do first observe the fashion of writing mottoes as well as names... What mine was I forget, but my wife's was most courteous; and most fair."

Along with honeyed messages, the postman will handle the usual heavy bundle of comic cards now a feature of the observance of St. Valentine's Day.

More than usual significance is attached to the day in the United States this year. A move to give women a real Valentine is underway and on Feb. 14 the Senate Judiciary Committee will vote on a proposed constitutional amendment reading:

"Men and women shall have rights throughout the United States and every place subject to its jurisdiction. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."

He turned, and walked away. What was the use of staying, or of saying anything more? She would never come back to him. She was satisfied with her bargain. Her resolution was almost admirable. a... he would not stoop to shake it. He had done what he could for her, and the next move -- if ever there should be another contact between them -- was hers. He walked away from her without a glance, though with every step he longed to turn back and carry her away with him.

Erica stood looking after him. He might leave her all the money he had, all his thousands and thousands of kronen, but she would not touch a penny of it. How was she to know in defence of that part of it the policeman had died? Nevertheless, she went on to her modest lodgings in the street through which he had just passed, with tears in her eyes.

FREEDOM FOR TWO

By MARGARET WATSON

How little he had understood her. How incapable she was of living up to his queer, irregular standards! Yes, she must certainly, and briefly, make it clear that she was her own master now, and that all was over between them. Then he would go away with one of his sea captains from the quays, and be off to some alien land where he could squander his thousands and thousands of kronen, and forget all about the dead policeman. If she gave him any hope, he would wait, and be captured. Dear as he was, and much as she loved and pitied and feared for him, her face must not soften nor her voice tremble at this moment.

She said: I shall not have anything to say. You had better go away at once. I am not coming.

She said it steadily, though she felt the hot longing for tears burning her eyes, and the dead white of his face hurt her with a sharp physical pain.

Very well. But if you should want money, I shall leave some in the bank for you.

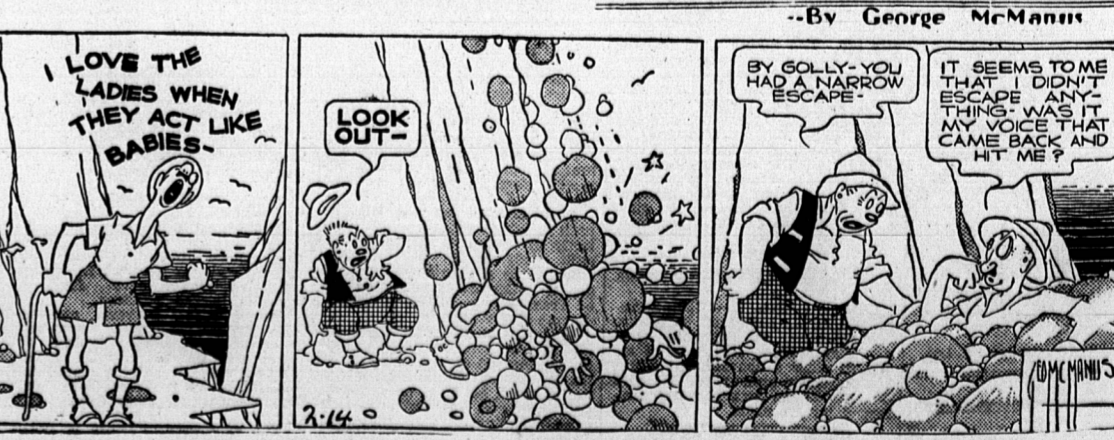

He turned, and walked away. What was the use of staying, or of saying anything more? She would never come back to him. She was satisfied with her bargain. Her resolution was almost admirable. a... he would not stoop to shake it. He had done what he could for her, and the next move -- if ever there should be another contact between them -- was hers.
