

When Your Cough Hangs On, Mix This at Home

The best cough remedy that money could buy, can easily be mixed at home. It saves money and gives you the most reliable, quick-acting medicine you ever used. The way it takes hold of stubborn coughs and chest colds, giving immediate relief, is astonishing.

Any druggist can supply you with 2½ ounces of Pinex. Pour this into a 16 oz. bottle, and fill up with plain granulated sugar syrup or strained honey. It's no trouble at all to mix, and when you once use it, you will never be without it. Keeps perfectly and tastes good—children really like it.

It is surprising how quickly this loosens the cross-layer phlegm, and soothes and heals the inflamed membranes. At the same time, part of the medicine is absorbed into the blood, where it acts directly on the bronchial tubes, and helps the system throw off the whole trouble. Even those severe coughs which follow cold epidemics, are promptly ended.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway Pine, containing the active agent of creosote, in a refined, palatable form. Nothing known in medicine is more helpful in cases of severe coughs, chest colds and bronchial troubles. Do not accept a substitute for Pinex. It is guaranteed to give prompt relief or money refunded.

THEY HAD TO SEE PARIS

By Homer Croy

Pike grew tired of it, for long ago the novelty had worn off. He was not a drinking man, although now and then he liked the stimulating effect. But now the mixed drinks made his head ache, yet he must continue drinking. He wanted to go home, but no—they must go to other places.

Mrs. Peters and Opal were having their hour. They rushed from one stuffy, bizarre restaurant to another watching tourists and sightseers becoming drunker and drunker. They ate among coffins and tombs, they ascended into heaven, and they went down into the expensive depths of hell, all in the name of Pleasure, and saw only tourists sitting on stools and in padded corners, guzzling and hoping to be shocked. What a spoiled evening it would be if they didn't see something they couldn't see in America.

Mrs. Peters leaned toward Pike. "Aren't these places just wonderful!" she enthused.

"Fool traps, that's all they are," returned Pike in his quick, determined way. "I'll be danged if I know why people lose all the sense they ever had the minute they hit Montmartre. If the fool-killer ever came here he'd never have to leave—just get a couple of assistants, roll up his sleeves, and start in."

Mrs. Peters had turned her back. She saw no such world. It was splendid, daring—"continental," she said, for she had now learned the word. America was provincial; it did not have a broad outlook, it paid too much attention to money. Here was freedom, here was living.

You can have the freedom," said Pike. "I'll take the sleep."

But before he could get to sleep that night Mrs. Peters had a conversation with him which she had been getting ready for some time.

"Pike, there is something I want to talk to you about."

"What is it, Idy?"

"It's the way we are living."

"Why, what's wrong with it?"

"It isn't as good as we should live."

Pike stared in astonishment.

"How's mean? Two months ago I wouldn't have believed it. The hardest work I've done since we hit Paris is to push a button."

"It isn't that. You and I could get along all right, but it's for the children—especially Opal. She should have a background."

"Background?" he repeated vaguely.

"What sort of a background?"

"A chateau!" echoed Pike. "My God! the only background I ever had was a haystack, and now the swellest hotel in Paris won't do my kids. Well, by jiggers! things move along so fast I can't keep up with 'em, that's all. Suppose we get a chateau, what good's it going to do us?"

"A great deal. It will give us culture and refinement, and nice people will want to come to see us. We aren't anybody here in a hotel, swallowed up by all these other people."

And then it was that the sleep came.

CHAPTER VI

The first few days in Paris for Pike had been wonderful; after all, it was a splendid relief to get away from his work, but now he was beginning to yearn for his old activities—the restless energy which had gone into making him a dominant figure in Clearwater could not be so easily put aside.

"Setting is the hardest work I ever done," he said.

He tried to sleep late of mornings, but he couldn't do it. The sounds of the street, bothered him, the continual blowing of taxi horns, the creaking of carts, the unloading of vegetables at the hotel, the hum of the elevator, the click as it stopped at a floor. Getting up of a morning, he would shave, but after a time gave it up—going out to a barber shop was something to do. He had brought with him to Paris three letters of introduction; one from his bank, one lawyer friend in Paris, and a third letter was to a retired Oklahoman now living in Paris. Pike preconcited one of the letters. The man took Pike to lunch, but he was busy and he had his own circle of friends—other lawyers, members of the American Chamber of Commerce, members of the American Legation, and so on, all of whom led their own lives outside of the tourist's who poured through Paris. The man was polite, mechanically genial, but long before lunch was over the edge of the conversation was dulled. By the time they were in the returning taxi each was striving to think of something to say.

"I want you to go to lunch with me," said Pike, as they shook hands.

"Yes, all right—some day."

He presented no more letters of introduction.

Pike became lonely. The first glamour of the Boulevards had worn off. He walked restlessly up and down them, tramped from one place to another, making errands for himself. He went to his bank twice a day to get the mail; he lingered in the marble lobby, hoping he would meet somebody from home he knew. Taking the newspaper from their files, he sat behind them, pretending to read, but in reality watching the people come and go. Other people met, shook hands, called one another by first names, seemed to know everybody, but he knew no one.

Pike got acquainted with one of the floor guards in gloves and blue uniform. He talked to him for long stretches at a time; he found out that his name was John and delighted in calling him that. He never knew what his other name was. Every time he came in he gave John a cigar.

She Has No More Pains In Her Back

Says Nova Scotia Lady After Using Dodd's Kidney Pills

Mrs. A. Eagles is Enthusiastic Over the Remedy That Brought Her Relief—Dodd's Kidney Pills

Londonderry, N. S., January 18.—(Special)—"I had a bad pain in my back," writes Mrs. A. Eagles, a well known and highly respected resident here. "My sister told me to take Dodd's Kidney Pills. I took ten boxes in all and now my back is as well as ever. I can do all my housework. I would not be without a box of Dodd's Kidney Pills in the house."

The kidneys strain all the poison out of the blood. The very nature of their work keeps them constantly in danger. They need occasional help if they are to do their work properly. Dodd's Kidney Pills are just a kidney remedy—purely and simply. They can be taken by old and young alike. If you wish to enjoy new health and energy all over the body, give Dodd's Kidney Pills a trial.
