The honour of being the capital did not restrain Montreal from sadly misbehaving itself in 1848. Differing in a marked degree from the views of the majority of the Legislature upon an important bill before that body, an excited mob sacked and burned down the Parliament House, and insulted and attacked the Governor General, Lord Elgin. The Assembly promptly passed an address praying His Excellency to call Parliament alternately at Toronto and Quebec, every four years.

The perambulating system failed to satisfy anyone, and after much squabbling a resolution was finally carried on the 24th of March, 1857, in favour of an address to Her Majesty, praying her to select the seat of government. This Her Majesty did and fixed upon Ottawa.

In making the choice, the Queen was guided by the advice of the Governor General, Sir Edmund Head, whose judgment was influenced by the idea that this was the safest settlement of a dangerous question. Apart from the political advantages of the location, the magnificence of the site is said to have impressed Sir Edmund favourably.

The Queen's decision became known early in 1855, and created intense hostility in other sections of the province. The Assembly again increased the difficulty by passing a resolution on the 25th of July, 1855: "That it is the opinion of this House that the city of Ottawa ought not to be the permanent seat of government for the province."

However, the same Assembly, in February 1859, after an excited discussion, and by a small but sufficient majority, affirmed Her Majesty's decision, and Ottawa at last became the Canadian capital.

When Queen Victoria, therefore, chose upon the banks of the Ottawa the place for Canada's capital, she left it with the picturesque name of that beautiful river.

When a country is young, and its history is not yet told in monuments or typified in ancient architecture, its capital should be adorned in other ways. The Tower of London and the memories that cluster round Westminster Hall must help to inspire even preslate members of the British Parliament with a dominant consciousness of the continuity of the government in which they are taking part, and the enduring nature of the laws they are helping to frame. Wise, then, were the advisers of the Queen, when, to compensate for the absence of monument, of the old, they gave Canada, as they sought, a site of surpassing beauty; and equally to be commended were those who conceived and carried out the glorious national buildings with which the rocky heights of Ottawa are crowned.

It cannot be denied that the national pride of the Canadian people, at the sight of the Acropolis, and that every Scottish heart beats high when he sees the ancient castle high on Edinburgh's hill; so to fill a Canadian with pride in his country, and confidence in its future, we show him the magnificence of the national buildings, as they glow and glitter in the setting sun, far above the toaming river. It may not be a logical ground for his patriotism, but it is a sentimental one at least, and it will influence his feelings and actions when he goes to his distant home, whether it be on the Western Prairie, or the shores of the Atlantic, or on the far-off Pacific Slopes.

The Senate Chamber and that of the House of Commons are very different in design. As necessary adjuncts to both chambers, there are a number of committee rooms and offices for the officials and the large staff of clerks. The Press is provided with good rooms and a gallery while the Post Office, the Law clerks, the French translators, the Hansard men and telegraph men all have separate quarters. There are reading rooms, smoking rooms, a magnificent restaurant, and private dining rooms for use during the session.

The Speakers of both Houses have apartments, adjoining the Chambers, where much entertaining is done. In the popular House there is always a large crowd in attendance when any important matter is to be discussed, or when any good speaker is expected to take the floor. It had been stated that some Parliamentary performers can always play much better to a large audience in the galleries than to a small one. It may be so.

If a member in his seat in the House at any time wishes to mail a letter, he may have his mail brought to him, to get a copy of the latest Patriot or Guardian from the reading room, to get a glass of water, or pen and ink, he snaps his fingers and immediately a little page, neatly clad in blue jacket and dark clothes, flies to do his bidding.

There are about twenty odd of these pages, and half of them are in attendance in the Chamber night and day. When there is a late sitting they often become sleepy and tired. The change in the hour of the evening sessions to eleven o'clock will no doubt be welcome to these cute little chaps.

Every time the date of a Dominion Election is announced, a lot of people want to run for Parliament; a good many do run; and out of the number, 245 are elected and enter the House of Commons. They share for varying periods his life of political adventure, his responsibilities, his compensations, his joys and his sorrows. They sail the political sea with its calm, and at other times its storms with its accompanying waves and billows. Some make progress and advancement, whilst others must be content to occupy positions of minor importance.

Those who enter Parliamentary life sometimes question whether any position, no matter how prominent, can compensate for the advantage of private life so often blasted when a man enters the political arena. However, the number prepared to take a chance does not seem to diminish from one election to another.

None of all places on earth, the House of Commons is least adapted to a man or woman of sensitive nature. It requires fortitude and resolution to withstand assaults, often as unkind as they are untrue. Public life, therefore, no place for the tenderfoot. It is not a bed of roses.

NARROW ESCAPE—A despatch of July 24 says:—Mr. and Mrs. Erskay, of St. John, and their three children had a narrow escape at 10.30 o'clock last night near Horne's Bridge, about five miles from New Glasgow, when their car backed over an eight-foot embankment while they were endeavoring to turn. They had just returned from a trip through Prince Edward Island, landing at Pictou about nine o'clock last night. Heading their car in the direction of Stellarton at Horne's Bridge, they took the Westville road by mistake. Instantly realizing their mistake they began to back out to the main road again, but reversing far too suddenly the car was hurled down an eight-foot embankment. The occupants miraculously escaped injury and were taken to friends in Stellarton. Later the car which escaped any serious damage was assisted to the road and proceeded to its destination.

THE MARKETS

MONTREAL, July 26. — A moderate amount of business was done with foreign buyers on the Montreal grain market today. Outside of sales of a few loads of No. 2 northern wheat made to local exporters at 41-1/2 c per bushel over the Winnipeg July option f. o. b. Montreal and some rough No. 3 northern at flat prices, the trade in grain in the domestic market was quiet. The demand for carlots of coarse grains was of a limited character, but the undertone was firm. The demand for spring and winter wheat grades of flour was again of a disappointing character, but values were unchanged. The undertone to the market for mill-feed was firm owing to the good demand and the small supplies available. The trade in standard grades of rolled oats was quiet and prices were unchanged. Prices for all grades of eggs were well maintained under a quiet demand from all sources. The receipts were 1,930 but prices were steady. The receipts were 35 packages. Owing to the fact that there has been little or no response from English importers for cheese at the late advance established here, there was a slightly easier feeling in the market today and prices were fractionally reduced. Western grades were quoted at 19-1/4c and eastern at 19 to 19-1/8c per pound. The receipts were 17,356 boxes.

OTTAWA, Ont., July 26. — (Eggs)—General condition of Canadian egg markets is unchanged from previous report with a fair demand existing and supplies about equal to requirements everywhere.

Toronto—The egg market is firmer. Dealers are quoting country shippers extras 33 to 34, firsts 30 to 31, seconds 26, delivered cases returned.

MONTREAL—Montreal dealers are quoting country shippers extras 33 to 35, firsts 30 to 31, seconds 27 to 28.

BRANDON—The trade is still quoting country shippers extras 29, firsts 27, seconds 23 delivered cases included. Calgary dealers continue to quote country shippers extras 28, firsts 25, seconds 20.

VANCOUVER.—There is no change in the tone or price of his market. Dealers continue to quote country shippers extras 28, firsts 26, pullet extras 24. There has been some enquiry from the east but no interest displayed at values existing here. There have been some sales of eggs held in local storage but no price reported. Halifax prices to country shippers for ungraded eggs delivered are extras 34, firsts 31, seconds 23.
