War's Bad Feeling Is Passing Away

LONDON, Dec. 29—A strong movement has been launched in England to supplement similar efforts made in France this summer to eliminate articles 231 and 227 from the Treaty of Vrsailles. These are the articles in which Germany acknowledges guilt for bringing on the war, and which fix upon Germany the accusation of having committed offences against international morality, the sanctity of treaties and the customs of war. A petition has been signed by more than one hundred persons of eminence, including univerity professors, high dignitaries of the Church and writers who declare that they have been deeply moved by the similar petition signed last July by one hundred Frenchmen and woman of distinction. The petition says:

"We regard these two articles, which were forcibly imposed upon a defeated nation under the most terrible threats, as having expressed a state of mind in the Allied and Associated Powers which has now largely passed away. We believe that they are manifestly unjust, and constitute a grave obstacle to international understanding. Consequently, we urge the governments concerned either to amend these articles with no further delay, or, if amendments of the treaty prove too long and cumbrous a proceeding to announce severally their intention to disregard them."

Among the signatories of the petition are Arnold Bennett, Muirhead Bone, St. John Irvine Sir Johnston Forbes Robertson Lady Gladstone, Julian Huxley J. Maynard Keynes, Gilbert Murray, George Bernard Shaw H. G. Wells and Israel Zangwill.

To Make Airplane Flying Fool-Proof

LONDON, Dec. 29—New navigational devices to be tried out on a practical scale during January by the Imperial Airways Company include two which are expected virtually to insure that an airplane will fly on its predetermined course for hours at a time with very little attention from the pilot. A series of night flights between London and Paris has been arranged.

This announcement follows the company's successful experiment with "neon" gas beacons, enabling pilots to land in a fog or at night at the Croydon airdrame just outside London.

In preliminary experiments with on of the new devices, gyro rudders, pilots have been able to leave th cockpit and sit in the cabin for a half hour or more at a time, leaving the machine to fly by itself. This rudder, working with another new device, the gyro aileron control, is expected when certain mechanical problems are overcome to relieve the pilot of most of his worries.

In addition to the neon ground lights, flood lights and lights showing the wind's direction, there recently has been invented another aid to the pilot for night and cloud flying, called the Reid turn indicator. This permits the pilot to send a wireless call which, when picked up by two land stations, brakes with the machine a triangle thereby enabling the pilot to locate himself.

Another scheme, the perfection of which will simplify landing in a fog, has to do with wireless control based on a leader cable. This is buried along the route and emits a distinctive note for the guidance of the airplane above.

HIS PET NAME.

A four-year-old boy, on being asked what his name was, replied, "Bunny."

"Have you no other name?"

"No."

"What is your father's name?"

"Daddy."

"Has he no other name?"

"No."

"What, then, does your mother call him?"

"Fathead!" piped the youngster triumphantly.

To Aid Magnesite Producers Here

OTTAWA, Dec. 29—A move to enable Canadian producers of magnesite to compete in the world market is being undertaken by the National Research Council of Canada. Except for a short space during the war, Austria has practically supplied the United States with this highly refractory mineral used chiefly in the manufacture of bricks for openhearth steel furnaces and copper converters. The biggest deposit yet discovered on the North American Continent of the resistant required for this purpose is in the Grenville district of Quebec, between Ottawa and Montreal. United States users of magnesite, however are financially interested in the Austrian deposits and when the war ended were inclined to use the Austrian product, although it is said to be inferior in quality to the Canadian deposits.

To assist the Canadian magnesite industry, the National Research Council has recently undertaken an investigation which, it is hoped, will enable Canadian producers to meet all competition. First, it is hoped to reduce the cost of producing the Canadian magnesite, by enabling operating companies to utilize a greater proportion of the crude rock. Next, improvement will be sought so as to make the Canadian product definitely superior to anything on the market. Lastly, an attempt will be made to develop uses to which Canadian magnesite has not yet been applied. A report by the National Research Council says that the work is already well under way.
