Through The Looking Glass

(By E. O. LAIRD)

A STRANGE PARADE

It was an intriguing atmosphere I chanced upon the evening I stepped into the corridor on the third floor of the Grand Dominion. Doors were open wide and students raced up and down the hall in and out of their respective rooms, in a manner so undignified that it was almost impossible to visualize the gay giddy creatures in any other setting. Notwithstanding my curiosity, I remained seated in a recessed window, mere spectator of their gawky until they finally converged in a scene of riotous color and confusion to a room at the far end of the corridor.

It seemed as if many decisions as to mode of dressing had been made and unmade in the different rooms. Clothes were hanging there on the chairs, on the bed, on the floor. Bureaus were littered with odds and ends of flannel, ribbon and lace. The bed in one room lacked their pillows. Turning away from the gay disorder, I went back to my window seat.

Suddenly the door of the closed room opened, and the most amazing figures emerged and came down the corridor. There was an old lady enveloped in a snow white night gown of the Mother Hubbard style of our own grandmothers. Myriads of tucks adorned the bosom, and the skirt fell away in voluptuous billows. Old fashioned crocheted pink wool bedroom slippers encased her feet, while her head was covered with a quaint and charming bonnet fastened under the chin by two strings tied bow fashion.

By her side limped an old man garbed in a white night shirt over heavy woolens. The woolens were long and flapped in such a manner around his ankles that the old gentleman had much ado to keep upright and in step with his billowing partner. Slender, fringed hair emerged from under his night cap, and a curious goatee protruded stiffly from his chin. Holding aloft two canes, a unique pair passed from my sight.

There followed close behind them a lady of such stupendous size that the minute she passed the door of her form I thought of the missing bed pillows. She was clad in green and white striped pyjamas. Since no bed pillows were to be seen, the bulky pyjama legs she came down the corridor like a square rigged boat in full sail. Indeed, as she went by I ducked my head to miss the breeze of her going.

The fourth figure in this strange procession was a nervous little man in a long, red, flannel dressing gown confined at the waist by a wide, leather belt. His head was covered with a red flannel skull cap, worn in such a manner as to convey an impression of being a bottle of smacking salts, which he carried to his nose.

Behind him followed a slight maiden in thin, pale pink, lattered and torn pyjamas. Her hair hung in waves about her shoulders, and she depicted despair. She grasped tightly in her hands a small basket filled with shrivelled apples and dry bread crumbs.

Bringing up the rear of this strange procession walked a tall and stately figure. Prosperity walked with her. She wore the latest, the most beautiful pyjamas of 1938 model.

As the strange parade moved from my sight, suddenly it dawned on me that what I had seen was a part of the much heralded, widely advertised Pyjama Party of the Girls' Collegiate, and what had passed before me were some of the funniest, the "depressionest" and the prettiest "costumes" worn to the gay affair.

Books-Art-Music (Continued from page 8. "It does not seem unreasonable to suppose that man in observing the things he has seen, would be might himself make a miniature dune by pouring grains of sand from his hand, as anyone might, sitting in a desert. But he would not be a builder, say, would notice that the angle of the slope from a given base is always the same. If it is found to be the same, he would down to find its proportion unless built of stone. The dune is always a triangle and has not the rounded base but a sharp point. It is not to be built a permanent dune?—and his Pharaoh agreed. It would prove he had conquered the desert.

"This is a very great love for Spain, and the tragedy of Spain is one of the contributory causes of this book—"the performer," she writes, "who can refrain from talking about himself is probably in the next world—talking. In the past my practice has been, save on occasion, to do the work in the theatre and painting of which I am capable, and let my biography reside impersonally in the work. Yet circumstances arise to alter a belief. The chief circumstance was the tragedy in Spain, a tragedy I witnessed in its beginning and climaxes during the past eight years. That tragedy somehow has given me a voice. It has caused me to realize that art alone like bread is not enough for life, if those who cannot speak, yet who do their share in making the world, are to be basely destroyed. In the name of that civilization to which the arts contribute."—And a very eloquent and individual voice it is.

A note, on the pronunciation of Angna Enters' name which looks troublesome, states that the matter is less difficult than it appears, by virtue of the fact that the "g" is soft—"Anjna."

When Miss Enters gave a performance in Toronto last March, "The development of the mimetic genius of the American artist Angna Enters, since her early appearances at Hart House Theatre has been remarkable. Always brilliant, her fitness in the delineation of human character, the amazing compass and variety of her art, and her amazing hold on the emotions of her audience, as revealed at the Eaton Auditorium recently, stamp her as indubitably a genius. No actress of to-day, so far as I am aware, can express so

Women's Institute Convention June 22nd

Cooperative health will be the theme discussed at the annual convention of the Women's Institute to be held at Prince of Wales College Hall, Wednesday, June 22.

Dr. Kingsley Roberts, director of the Bureau of Cooperative Medicine of the United States of America and an expert in this field of cooperative health, will address the convention. Dr. Robert will arrive from New York on June 21.

Dr. Roberts was born in New York on December 29, 1893. His father was a surgeon and his mother was a New England paragon. His pre-academic education was conducted at the Fessenden School, West Newton, Massachusetts and at the Hill School in Pottstown, Pennsylvania. He was graduated from the Yale School of Medicine in 1914 and from the degree of Ph. B. in 1914 and from the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, in 1920. He had one year's experience in Naval Reserve before graduating from medicine. His internship, with surgical service, was served at the New York Post Graduate Hospital.

Immediately upon leaving the Post Graduate Hospital he became a member of the staff of the Fifth Avenue Hospital. In 1936 he resigned from position of Assistant Surgeon of that institution. He has devoted his entire practice to surgery and has published many articles in various journals. Dr. Robert will address the annual convention of the Prince Edward Island Nurse's Association on the afternoon of June 22 and will speak at the Remira Hall on the night of June 23.

much with a gesture, a glance and a movement. Two contemporaries, Ruth Draper and Ethel Merman, Skinner single-handed do marvelous things in the presentation of character, but adept use of the voice plays an important part in the delineation. Miss Enters' animated pictures are entirely self-made, save for incidental music, but equally graphic and searching. She can present a lucid story with the utmost economy of effort.

A note appeared in a recent New York Times—"Artists who will appear in the 'All Star' concert series sponsored by Emma Goldman, the Philadelphi next season include Kirsten Flagstad, Rose Bampton, Nino Martini, Sergei Rachmaninoff, Yehudi Menuhin, and Angna Enters."

Angna Enters started her career as a painter and later studied dancing, at first only as an aid to painting. She has had her drawings and water colours exhibited in several galleries including the Museum of Modern Art in New York and the Warren Galleries of London. "First Person Plural" is illustrated with Miss Enters' own work in addition to several photographic illustrations.

Miss Enters also plays the piano and guitar and in her book has many interesting references to music and her use of it in her work. When she was in Greece she made a collection of folk airs, using some of them for her Greek Mime. Of these she writes, "The people who are awake to the dangers of the present situation in relation to the liquor traffic ought to stir themselves to renewed action."—GUY HAYLER.

THE DOPE MENACE

Sometimes W.C.T.U. women are accused of being extreme and exaggerated in the statements they make and the warnings they utter. "Are we guilty of painting too black a picture of the danger to youth in the drug habit?" Just now that the drug peddlers arrested in Toronto the first week of April were traced because young girls had been offered their wares. Note too that a sixteen-year-old mother in a Western Ontario town had smoked some of the "new thrillers," and by the statement of her mother had been unconscious for two whole days with no knowledge of where she was taken. Hence her present sad circumstances!

A PARADOX

A state will license the manufacture and sale of liquor to get revenues, and then tax your home, your household goods, your car, what you eat, even the chickens you raise, to care for the criminals, the paupers, and the insane that liquor makes.

W. C. T. U. NOTES

DANGER

Write it on the workhouse gate, Write it on the schoolboy's slate, Write it in the copy-book: "Where there's drink there's danger."

Write it in the nation's laws, Blotting out the license clause; Write it on the ballot white So it can be read aright: "Where there's drink there's danger."

Write it on the ships that sail, Borne along by storm and gale, Write it large, in letters plain, Over every land and main: "Where there's drink there's danger."

Write it over every gate, On the church and halls of state; In the heart of every band, On the laws of every land: "Where there's drink there's danger."

Write it o'er, the railroad wreck, Write it on the sinking deck, Write upon our hearts the truth, We'll earn it, in our youth: "Where there's drink there's danger."

DRINK AND DRIVING

Men and women celebrate in certain ways if they so desire but they should take warning in advance not to put their hands on the wheel of a motor car if they have been drinking. To do so is to invite tragedy, hospital, and sudden death. Drinking and driving should be permanently separated. A motor car is too powerful a weapon to be put into the hands of a driver who may be at all murky in his thinking and acting.

THE NEED OF THE TIMES

The energetic propaganda displayed by the Liquor Traffic in all parts of the world for the further increased sales of alcoholic liquors, calls for renewed activity by all men and women who love their fellows, and see their social uplift through sobriety. It is necessary to hold fast the position gained during the past 100 years, and to continue to carry on the work of the Temperance Movement to its final victory.

In the days of Joseph Livesey, William Hoyle, Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Joseph Collins, Francis Willard, Mary Hunt, Mrs. Cassie, Rosalind, Countess of Carlisle, Charlotte Gray, and other founders and workers of yesterday, the need of the time before them, and they rose to the occasion. These who have labored should be the inspiration of all present day workers. These built on a sound and secure foundation and they truly blessed may tread with confidence.

When we come to think of the vast sums spent annually in liquor advertising, that young and old may be induced to drink, the need of the time is clear. Flaming placards flash from every hoarding, near schools, churches, public institutions, and in business centres. Practically every daily, weekly and monthly publication has its wet spots in special circulars sent through the post, by means of the radio, in tram, train and bus—everywhere one is faced with this propaganda for the liquor traffic.

No man who has the slightest wish for human betterment can be unconcerned about the matter. Sobriety must be done—and done without delay! With the introduction of traffic lights there has been made more patent the need for road control of motor vehicles. It is not the drunken driver about whom the authorities are concerned, it is the ordinary drinking driver—the moderate man who causes road accidents now number ten of thousands in fatalities and injured persons. Something must be done to stop this waste of human life. Blood tests and other remedies have been suggested, and are being tried, but the only real remedy is total abstinence.

Total abstinence for the driver and the pedestrian alike. Until some drastic legislation is carried through Parliament to bring this about, there is little chance of any satisfactory change for the better—was an old adage expresses it: "Where there's drink there's danger."

The need of the time is a great consecration, greater enthusiasm, and more teaching of the fundamental principles of the Temperance Movement—total abstinence for the individual and prohibition for the state. We are still those awake to the dangers of the present situation in relation to the liquor traffic ought to stir themselves to renewed action."—GUY HAYLER.

a fair sample of Canada as a whole. While these are results which can be recorded in our statistics, what about the many, many acts of kindness and service which are rendered by these "friends in need" our Travellers' Aid Workers? A book could be written of the kindness shown, the heavy hearts cheered, the burdens lightened, the grief shared, the joys doubled by these faithful women who have ears for all sorrows and hearts to embrace all humanity.

During the past nine years of drought and distress in our Province many persons have found themselves stranded in strange cities without food, shelter, or friends, but the Travellers' Aid Workers proved that there are still those who care for the stranger within our gates and are anxious and willing to extend a helping hand, give kindly advice and help in any way to lessen the load of care and distress which some are finding almost more than they can bear. Every day our Travellers' Aid puts into practice the command, "Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfil the law of Christ."—Yorkton, Sask.
