Happenings of the Week

It seems to me I'd like to go Where bells don't ring nor whistles blow, Nor clocks don't strike, nor gongs don't sound, And I'd have stillness all around. Not real stillness, but just the trees' Low whisperings, or the hum of bees, Or brooks' faint babbling over stones In strangely, softly tangled tones, Or maybe a cricket or katydid, Or the song of birds in hedges hid, Or just some such sweet sounds as these To fill the tired heart with ease. If 'twere for sight and sound and smell I'd like a city pretty well; But when it comes to getting rest I'd like the country lots the best. Sometimes it seems to me I must just quit the city's din and dust And go out where the sky is blue; And says, how does it seem to you?

The Duke of Devonshire, who has just celebrated his 62nd birthday, is one of the greatest land owners in England. He owns 186,000 acres of land. His home at Chatsworth, England, contains priceless art treasures, including the coronation chairs of a number of kings. The Duke of Devonshire is a close friend of the King, who visits him at Chatsworth. The King met the Duke's little grand-daughter, Arabella Mackintosh on his way down to breakfast one morning. He stopped to speak to her and asked her what her name was. "Arabella," she said simply, "what's yours?" "George," replied the King. "Well, George, you had better hurry down to breakfast," said little Arabella, "cos granny will give you no end of scolding if you're late."

Lord Charles Cavendish, son of the Duke of Devonshire, is now working in a bank in Wall Street, where he has temporarily dropped his courtesy title.

Will the Girl Whose Fiance Outshines Her Make Him a Suitable Wife?—Why Happiness Usually Results When a Woman Marries Her Brother-in-Law

Dear Miss Dix—My mother died when I was a very small child and all during my childhood I was continually told by the various relatives with whom I lived how stupid I was. So there must be something to it. Now I am engaged to one of the finest men I have ever known. He is keen, intelligent, very prominent in every way in the city in which he lives. And I am afraid to marry him because I haven't the poise and the intelligence to make him a fitting wife. In the first place, I lack social ease and grace of manner. I have never been able to learn to play a good game of bridge or of golf, though I have tried.

I ask you in all sincerity, would you advise me to break my engagement to this man or marry him, knowing full well what disillusion is in store for him and fearing I will be a handicap instead of a help to him? I care enough for him not to want to marry him if my doing so will harm him in any way. I have not deceived him. He knows my people and has known me for six years and we have been engaged for over a year. Will I be doing this man an injustice if I marry him? KAY.

Answer: My dear girl, you have the worst case of an inferiority complex that I have ever encountered. I would say to a psychoanalyst, except that you have analyzed your case yourself, and you realize that your self-distrust was bred in you in childhood by the fault-finding of those who had you in charge. They fixed in your mind the idea that you were dull and slow and you have never been able to get over it.

But something with boiling oil in it should be done to anybody who ever tells a child that it is stupid or homely or awkward, because its only effect is just to intensify whatever defect it has. To be forever telling a child that it is stupid makes it still more stupid, because it feels that there is no use in its trying to learn.

To tell one that it is homely makes it the more homely, because it makes it self-conscious and robs it of the poise and grace that might have atoned for its homeliness. To tell one that it is awkward makes it so shy that it clouches and stumbles and halts and becomes a veritable bull in a china shop. The happiness of innumerable men and women has been wrecked by having some fault in their childhood always held up before them. Innumerable men and women have been failures because their self-confidence was destroyed in childhood.

The man you are engaged to is of mature age. He is a man of the world who has seen and known many women. He holds a high position in his community. Surely you must recognize that there is something very fine and charming and admirable about you that makes him select you from among all the other women he knows for a wife.

I think myself that I know what it is that he admires in you. Your modesty that makes you undervalue yourself. Your unselfishness that makes you willing to sacrifice yourself for his good. Your love that makes you put his happiness before your own. These are rare qualities and they are even more to be desired in a wife than an ability to play a crack game of bridge or win a golf championship. So quit being a Doubting Thomasina and go along and marry your man and be happy ever afterward.

And let me tell you for your comfort that very few men object to outshining their wives or to having wives who look up to them as little tin gods. In fact, the inferiority complex in a wife as regards her husband is a distinct asset.

Women want to look up to their husbands, but men like to look down on their wives. So, as long as you think that your husband is wiser and more cultured than you are and that he is an oracle who can settle every question right off the bat, why, so much the better for all concerned.

The other day a little group of women were discussing a very unusually beautiful and brilliant woman who is very much in love with her husband and who, in commercial phrase, is always trying to "sell" herself to him by telling him compliments that have been paid her.

"Fool," explained a wise woman, "if she wants to make a hit with her husband, she should keep silent about what people say about her good looks; and her wit and tell him what people say about how handsome he is and what a wonderful raconteur."

So, don't be afraid that you won't come up to your husband's expectations. You will as long as you admire him. DOROTHY DIX.

Dear Miss Dix—I am a middle-aged widow. My children are all grown and gone. My sister recently died. Left a handsome husband who is one of the best men who ever lived. Now that she is gone he is very lonely and feels that it would kill him to break up his home, which is very beautiful. I go and clean his house every week for him and he is very grateful when he comes home in the evening and finds everything neat and tidy and a good hot supper waiting for him. Would it be wrong for me to try to marry him? I know his wants and could make him happier than any other woman could. PERPLEXED WIDOW.

Answer: Go to it, sister. You will be doing a kind deed to marry him because it is quite true, as you say, that you know his ways and can make him happier than any other woman could.

I have never been able to see why there was always the pother about a man marrying his deceased wife's sister, because such marriages are almost invariably made in heaven. In the first place, a man wouldn't marry his wife's sister unless he had been very fond of his wife and wanted some one as much like her as he could get. Nor would he marry her without knowing exactly what he was getting, and so one sister often slips into the other sister's shoes so readily that the man hardly knows that he has changed wives at all. And, of course, when there are children, it virtually eliminates the stepmother problem because the aunt has an affection for the children that no stranger could have.

Of course, to give advice to a widow about the technique of snaring a husband is like offering counsel to the Izaak Walton League about how to catch fish, but I might remark in passing that you are using the right bait.

No widower, trying to keep house alone and confronted with unwashed floors and unmade beds and undusted mantelpieces and a sink full of dishes and having to eat his own cooking, could be insensible to the attentions of a woman who brought order out of chaos in his rooms and welcomed him home to a savory supper.

Nor could he help thinking how comfortable life would be with such a Length is another element in the current silhouette that affects new designs in jewellery. As skirts and gloves lengthen, so do jewelled necklaces take on extra inches. Chains that measure a full yard when doubled and fastened are smart. With daytime dresses they are worn looped around the throat to give the appearance of several strands joined together. In the evening they are permitted to fall in their full length hanging below the waist. Designers like these long necklaces to be supplied.

Among the trifles that may be bought for the summer cottage are the small metal bridge boards. These appeal to those who like their game on a breezy veranda or out in the open, because the board has little clips to catch each card or trick as it is played and hold it from being blown away.

Mrs. F. J. Casey's many friends are glad to see her out again after her recent indisposition.

Theatrical into a... the business of Dr. J. C. McDonald of Mr. Stewart is deeply regretted by a wide circle of friends.

Mrs. Alex McKinnon and two interesting children have arrived from Montreal to visit with Mrs. MacKinnon's mother, Mrs. Hammond Kelly, Southport.

Miss Anne Phillips has arrived home to spend a vacation with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Phillips.

Mrs. Gordon Scott, Ottawa, is among the summer visitors at Brackley Beach.

Mrs. Roy Innes, Fort Hill, has been spending the past week with friends in Port Elgin, N. B.

Miss Ethel Bagnall, who has been visiting her sister, Mrs. J. A. Rodd and Mr. Rodd at Meach Lake, Ottawa, has left for Montreal en route to Baie de Chaleur, Que., to spend some time.

The Caledonian Club sports on Dominion Day was one of the nicest gatherings held by the club and widely patronised. The horse races at Summerside on the same day also attracted a large attendance of race-lovers, who thoroughly enjoyed the afternoon's entries.

The Militia in Camp is causing quite a lot of pleasurable excitement among the younger people who are vying with one another in extending hospitality to the visitors. The officers of the Light Horse are entertaining at tea this afternoon in return.

Queen's Quarterly spring number contains an interesting article by Frank Yeigh, well-known lecturer and author of the series Facts About Canada, on Scott, Carlyle and Dickens in Canada. Mr. Yeigh has visited Charlottetown on several occasions having relatives here.

It is news to most people that Thomas Scott, brother of Sir Walter, was paymaster of the 70th Regiment, stationed in Scotland and transferred to Canada in 1813, during which time of war with the United States and for ten years, the brother of the famous Waverley Novels' author was a resident of Quebec city, where the author of the article discovered his grave. Sir Walter, says Mr. Yeigh was opposed to Tom's staying in Canada for fear that annexation would make him an American citizen instead of a British subject.

Thomas Carlyle's brother Alec, a shopkeeper in Ecclefechan, came to Brantford in the '40s. It was there that he got news in the famous letter from the great philosopher concerning the death of his mother. Nothing is said in the article about Dr. Carlyle, teacher at the Normal School here, who was a nephew of Thomas. But Prince Edward Island notes Mr. Yeigh had a romantic connection with the sage of Chelsea in Margaret Gordon, granddaughter of the first governor of P. E. I., who it is alleged, became the first love of Thomas and was immortalized as Blumine in Sartor Resartus. Carlyle met her at Kirkcaldy in 1818 after she had left Canada to live in Scotland.

The connection of Dickens with Canada is much more personal, as already revealed in American Notes concerning the lecture tour of 1842; still more vividly in the mounted police career of Francis Dickens' son of the novelist, who was in command of the detachment at Fort Pitt when the fort was captured in the "real oil siege" by Big Bear in 1885, when Dickens and his men, forced to evacuate, went down the Saskatchewan in the floating ice on a scow. The same issue of the Quarterly contains Francis Dickens' Diary of the 1885 rebellion.

A Morning Smile

"YEA, A DANIEL!"

During the trial of a man on a serious charge of theft the evidence was so palpably insufficient that the Judge stopped the case and directed the jury to return a verdict of "not guilty."

A well-known lawyer, however, who wished to do something for the fee he had received for the defence, claimed the privilege of addressing the court.

"We'll hear you with the greatest pleasure," said the Judge, "but to prevent accident, we'll first acquit the prisoner!"

Hot July Days Hard On Baby

July—the month of oppressive heat; red-hot days and sweltering nights; is extremely hard on little ones. Diarrhoea, dysentery, colic and cholera infantum carry off thousands of precious little lives every summer. The mother must be on her guard to prevent these troubles, or if they come on suddenly to fight them. No other medicine is of such aid to mothers during the hot summer as is Baby's Own Tablets. They regulate the bowels and stomach, and an occasional dose given to the well child will prevent summer complaint, or if the trouble does come suddenly will banish it. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.
