Q. On moving a few days ago I lost my ration book. My boarding housekeeper says I must either get one or leave. What should I do?

A. Go to your local ration board where you will sign a sworn statement that you lost your book. You will then be issued with a temporary card pending the issuance of another ration book.

Q. Will there be more raisins and prunes available this year?

A. Yes, there will be more raisins and prunes on the market this year than in any year since 1941.

Dorothy Dix Says—

WIDOWER MUST GUARD SPEECH

Stupid To Make First Wife Favorite Topic Of Conversation With Second Mate

DEAR MISS DIX—How do you think you would feel if you were married to a widower and had been frankly told by him that he did not love you as deeply as he did his first wife?

I keep busy making a comfortable home, but I feel that I am not a wife. I am just my husband's housekeeper. He never tells me that he loves me, or shows me any affection. We live together as two friends would, but my nature craves more than friendship from my husband. What would you do under the circumstances?

SECOND WIVES NEED CONSIDERATION

ANSWER—Well, if I had married a widower who told me flat out that he didn't love me as deeply as he did his first wife, I would think that I was unwise any man being married to a woman for whom he had not the deepest respect and admiration. I can't imagine any man being married to a woman for whom he had not the deepest respect and admiration. I can't imagine any man being married to a woman for whom he had not the deepest respect and admiration.

Yet there are men who are stupid enough to do this and who, without realizing that they are putting their second wives through the torments of the Inquisition, are forever throwing their first wives in their faces. They discuss about how the dear departed did this and that, and how she could run a house without money, and compare that to stay at home, and how she never wanted to go anywhere but just present embodiment of their hearts and homes doesn't rise up and smile at them with the coffee pot, or take the coffee to them.

Of course, a second wife realizes that her husband gave his first wife something that he never can give her. She had the freshness of his youth, and the romantic ardor that once some can never be revived. For that belongs to young love. But her husband can give her a love that is deeper and tenderer and more enduring than his childish fancy. For

Living & Leisure The Woman's Realm

The sun was warm, but the wind was still. You know how it is with an April day. When the sun is out and the wind is still, you're one month up in the middle of March.

But if you so much as dare to speak, a cloud comes over the sunlit arch. A wind comes over a frozen peak. And you're back two months in the middle of March.

OBSERVE THESE RULES

Never take medicine in the dark. Always read the directions carefully before taking a dose of medicine.

Never increase the dose or take it more frequently than directed without asking your physician.

Four from the bottle with the label upward. This keeps the label clean and easy to read. Medicines get stronger. Others weaker, if contained in a glass.

Cover container at once. Some medicines get stronger, others weaker, if contained in a glass.

Ellen's Diary

By An Island Farmer's Wife

We experienced a sort of let-down feeling at Alderlea, today, something very much like the day following a holiday. The mailman was unable to make his usual rounds today because of road conditions. Consequently we have no newspaper. I was amused to watch the various reactions when I read the Daily Mail. Once I read or heard a funny story that interested Father's reactions when the paper doesn't come. But Father wasn't the only one who missed the paper today. Although he had a very unusual expression as he returned from the mail-box. He consulted the old clock carefully and then said: "Guess there's no mail today. Don't forget to tell Mrs. Ellen, Jeanie said: 'What no paper?'"

I confess I sometimes do with a lost expression. I confess I sometimes do with a lost expression. I confess I sometimes do with a lost expression. I confess I sometimes do with a lost expression.

I did a bit more baking this morning. Some ice-cream cookies and some very engaging oatmeal cookies. Instead of using a commercial shortening I used what Aunt Elly Mahoney called "Drippings."

I was trying to give her the rights of a recipe. "What on earth is dripping?" Then I had to explain to her. It was the fat left over from frying the breakfast bacon or the rony slices of ham and could be used very successfully in making cookies in two layers, cutting a round out of the one used for the second storey and dropping a little of jelly in its place. I expect I shall be obliged to place them under lock and key for James is always very sorry to say my sugar is almost gone. Oh, well, there is always a full tide and a low tide.

I judge by the maddening smell I get when I open the porch door tonight that certain animal deors by nature, with one stripe crawling about Alderlea, doubtless mapping out a summer campaign. I sincerely hope that Father's meetings with him although I have seen braver dogs than Pard where a skunk is concerned. I was saying to James at noon today, if I had could shoot strait, I would have a splendid chance to win every prize in the present crow competition. cause as my mother often said, "Ellen, dear, you do let your hair interfere with your face."

Instead of warm April showers it is April frosts and winds and I'm wondering tonight where the Alderlea boys are. I do hope they are cuddled close in some sheltered spot. Even Pard begs to remain behind the kitchen stove. This is the one I was reared on. It was no easy matter, for I was one of the family who "lived in a shoe." If I went, I would be all for giving him another chance, while knowing full well he should hang high 'twixt heaven and earth, higher than Haman. Yes experience teaches it must be a film-hearted sort of woman. So I can never go back.

Until tomorrow Diary—Good-night.

DEAR MISS DIX—In a recent article I read that there is something in the personality of people who have dark hair which blonds do not possess. It is a certain personality which brunettes have held a chance to advance himself in his work and make enough money to make, or wait for my husband's return.

ANSWER—Apparently you are one of the hecking wives who think that their husbands should ask their permission to even breathe. He was perfectly justified in accepting the good job that would give you a chance to advance himself in his work and make enough money to make, or wait for my husband's return.
