Plan Will Speed Ordination of Students

BELLEVILLE, Ont., Sept. 17 (CP)—Commissioners at the United Church of Canada General Council today entered into a war measure acceleration of theological courses which will speed ordination of students from four to 10 months under the plan to be adopted next March.

The general Council accepted an amendment of Dr. A. E. Kerr, which would give the colleges have authority to arrange the plan to suit local conditions.

Lengthy argument was precipitated by a clause in the report submitted by Dr. George Dorey that called for continuous study on the part of students from Sept. 15 to March 31.

The drain on field students the plan would cause was deplored by Rev. H. Thompson of Kingston. The gain would be offset by the service lost in the field during the period of the course, he said.

He suggested a plan whereby students could study while doing field work. J. C. Cochrane of North Bay, Ont., told the Council if the church depleted its rural areas no theological colleges could save it.

"It's all very well to sit here complacently and talk," he said, "but if some of you walked among these rural areas you would be conscience-stricken."

He said he was concerned about the "heretics of the rural areas. We must make their future secure." He said the church should not be so concerned with the saving of money as the salvation of the rural districts.

Bracken Outlines Labor Problem

OTTAWA, Sept. 17 (CP)—Premier John Bracken and Agriculture Minister Campbell of Manitoba today outlined the problem of western labor for a gigantic harvest.

Bracken said that the National War Services officials today.

"We asked them to keep the situation in mind when enforcing manpower regulations and they gave assurance of sympathetic consideration," Mr. Bracken said.

"We want nothing to interfere with the war effort, but we felt the importance of having all the manpower possible made available to handle the crop should be stressed."

United Church General Council

BELLEVILLE, Ont., Sept. 17 (CP)—General council of the United Church of Canada yesterday recommended an appeal be made immediately for young doctors and nurses now in the army to volunteer for medical service in China in view of the great lack of rehabilitation which will develop there.

The motion, proposed by the committee of foreign missions, said the appeal was necessary in order to have candidates ready for service at that time. The measure recommended that after the war assistance be given doctors and nurses recommended by the missions in undertaking post-graduate study in Canada. It suggested this aid might be given both financially through scholarships, and also through helping such students secure suitable positions in hospitals and medical institutions.

The report pointed out there was great need for reconstructing and re-equipping bombed and looted hospitals in China, and urged the work of the Red Cross Society continue at the close of the war. It suggested army authorities be approached on the possibility of presenting newly hospital's in China with such articles as X-rays apparatus, surgical instruments and other hospital supplies if and when these are no longer needed by the military.

Earlier the council decided the pension fund of the church, beginning January, 1945, will be administered as a separate fund and financed through assessment of pastoral charges. Council adopted a recommendation a committee be appointed to devise a plan of charge assessment and the formation of the separate pension fund. It rejected a proposal to extend the retirement age limit for ministers to 73 years for the duration due to the scarcity of ministers, and instead extended the retirement age from 65 to 68 years.

More U. S. Troops Reach Britain

LONDON, Sept. 18 (Friday)—(CP)—The Daily Mail said today that another large contingent of United States troops, including hundreds of army technical experts, some air force personnel, and anti-aircraft and transport units, has arrived in Britain. The troops, whose arrival date was not given, were said to have had a fast, peaceful Atlantic crossing, escorted by British and American warships and R. A. F. flying boats in the final stage. Strange Victory

By FRANKEN MELONEY Author of "Call Back Love"

She compelled her thoughts away from him. Will you draw me, Marie, said you've unpacked? The man's silver eyes took judgment of her again. She would have liked to ask, "Are you young, but she seemed to think better of it. "Will this one do, Miss?" "Yes." "Thank you." Marie laid out a chic dinner gown with a trace of awe. "I can't find any evening stockings, no matter what size—my eyes were on the run. You couldn't find them, because there aren't any." Paige cheerfully informed her.

Marie looked blank before such disarming candor, and disappeared into the last tiled bathroom adjoining. Alone, Paige wiped off the pinching spectacles and turned her hands up towards her hair, her blessed hair that was worth hundreds of dollars a year for never having to be dressed. On it was wadded, she said to be alive!

She made short work of bathing and dressing. The evening slipped over her head, and slid gently to the floor in gentle folds. She looked in the mirror and raised her hair. To her old girl, because this happens to be one of your better looking moments, in fact you're quite beautiful if I must say it as shouldn't—

Paige, the spectacles were on her nose. She surveyed herself in mingled amusement and disgust—she wasn't even homely, she just looked plain ridiculous. She took the glasses off and looked at herself again. "Look here, Debby or Paige, or whoever you are, one of these days you're going to forget these spectacles, and then what where will you be? And, anyway, you don't like pretending to be something that you aren't, so if Mr. Michael Herron doesn't prove of you, you may as well know it straight off."

She put the glasses away, and then almost changed her mind as someone knocked. "It's no crime to be good looking," she thought rebelliously, and called, "Come in!"

Erica entered, closing the door behind her and standing against it. She wore a white silk dress with a black sash, and for the first time Paige saw how thin she was, with the tender, pitiful gawkins of adolescence. A puzzled expression crept over her face as she stared at Paige. "You're different."

"Oh," said Paige nonchalantly. "It's just the glasses. I'm not wearing them this evening."

"You weren't a bit pretty with them on, but the child broke off, annoyed at herself for softening. Her eyes grew dark and hostile, and she stood with her back against the door in more ways than one. "I came in to tell you that I didn't think I was going to like you," she said with an unnatural determination in her voice. "I thought it would be fair to let you know it before we began, then you wouldn't be expecting anything that I wouldn't be able to give."

Paige hid her discomfiture. "That's plain talking from the talking," she remarked, unruffled. "And I rather like you for coming out with it and getting it said. I wish, though, that you'd tell me whether it's particularly me you don't like, or just the idea of me. That would help me to know whether there's anything about me that had failed."

Erica's face worked under some great stress within her. "It isn't you, I guess. It's just that I'm a quick unbidden sob tightened her throat and she couldn't talk. Paige went to her and put her arm about her shoulder. She felt the child relax a little and come toward her.

Marie's voice sounded from the other side of the door. "Dinner's served, miss. Shall I call Miss Erica?"

"No, Marie. I'll call her." She knew that if she kept her arm about Erica, that a torrent of pent-up burning emotion would pour forth. The child was at the breaking point of some violent inner conflict. But it was not wise to encourage her to give way at this time. "Shall we go downstairs?" she asked casually.

A muted, "Yes," came from the low corridor together. At the foot of the stairs, Michael Herron stood waiting for them. The look of surprise, and then a shadow of disappointment passed over his face as he glanced up. But he maintained his well bred inscrutability and said merely, "Shall we go in to dinner?"

The dining room was vast and dim, lighted by the flicker of candles set in massive silver holders. Paige's eyes lit to a painting of the same woman whose portrait hung in the great hall. She was half aware that Michael Herron was watching her as if he were somehow committing a violation of his privacy. She dropped her eyes and took her place.

Food came and went—extravagantly conventional dishes impeccably prepared, and impeccably served. Michael Herron ate scarcely anything. Paige glanced at Erica's plate. Here, too, was untouched. She realized suddenly that healthy normal appetites were not brought to this table—meal after meal must be passed in a maelstrom of tense, suppressed feeling, with the portrait, mysterious an aloof, presiding like a guest. Her own appetite vanished abruptly and she put her fork down. Michael Herron broke the silence. "Well, have coffee in the other room," he told the butler.

At the door to the great hall Erica asked to be excused. "Not going to bed, are you?" Michael's big hand timidly touched the child's shoulder. "Yes, I'm tired. Good night."

"May I go up with you?" Paige asked. "Thank you. I never have any-

Memorial Service

The Odd Fellows and Rebekahs of Charlottetown are sponsoring an annual memorial service in their hall last night. The service is held in remembrance of members who have died, the number now totaling 234.

A wreath was placed on the monument in remembrance of 18 members buried overseas during the war on active service during the First Great War. Another was placed at the People's Cemetery in remembrance of members buried there and elsewhere.

The Rebekah tribute was delivered by Mrs. L. H. Coffin and the Oddfellows tribute by Mr. Ralph MacLean. Rev. T. H. Bussell Somers, M.A., S.T.M., gave the Divine tribute which was listened to with great interest as his theme was most appropriate.

The singing was led by a choir under the direction of Mrs. Angus McEachern. The funeral service, as well as the decoration service, was impressive and beautiful. Mr. J. R. Compton presided and Mr. C. H. Black acted as chaplain.

The committee in charge of arrangements included Messrs. Gordon P. Rodd, P.G., chairman; George S. Ryan, P.G.M., secretary; James H. Compton, treasurer; Acorn, Percy G. Gay, Mrs. Pearl MacKay, Mrs. Ruth White, Mrs. Mildred Rodd, Mr. Ivan MacInnis.

Taylor Resumes Vatican Mission

WASHINGTON, Sept. 17 (AP)—Secretary of State Cordell Hull announced today that Myron C. Taylor has resumed his mission as President Roosevelt's personal representative at the Vatican and would remain stationed there for a limited time.

Taylor returned to the United States from Vatican City a year ago for reasons of health, and it was while he was in the States here that Italy declared war on the United States.

Word that he is returning to his post despite wartime transportation and communications difficulties aroused much interest both here and in foreign capitals, and there was some speculation as to the significance of his return at this particular time.

Hull did not touch on any phase of Taylor's instructions beyond the fact that he is resuming his mission as Mr. Roosevelt's personal representative at the Holy See. Nor would any State Department official comment further.

Hull was asked at his press conference whether it could be assumed that Italy had granted special conduct to Taylor, since he would be returning to the Holy See. He indicated that such an assumption would be correct.
