LORD DERBY SAYS FULL WEIGHT OF U. S. ARMS IS NEEDED

Declares Struggle Will Not End Until America Strikes Telling Blow

MUST STRIKE HARD AND STRIKE QUICKLY

American Contingent Would Have Inspiring Effect on Troops at the Front.

By Canadian Press

PETROGRAD via London.—As a result of a meeting in Petrograd of the Commanders-in-Chief from all the fronts except the Caucasus, Generals Brussiloff and Gurko have withdrawn their resignations, and reports of further resignations are refuted by the definite announcement that all the Commanders have decided to remain at their posts. Thus the crisis in the army, which formed an alarming, accompaniment to the political crisis, has been averted.

Had Ruined Discipline

Discussing with the temporary Government, the serious condition of affairs at the front, the Commanders declared that the unfortunate phrase "peace without annexations" had found its way to the army and was transmitted into an argument against offensive warfare. This and other harmful doctrines pervading the army, and the inability of the officers to satisfactorily explain them, had ruined discipline and destroyed the authority and prestige of the officers. The discord in Petrograd had naturally found an echo everywhere at the front, but the spirit of the soldiers was slowly recovering, and the power of the Russian army was by no means lost.

LONDON.—"This war will not be over until the full weight of America has been thrown into the scales; not until America begins making war as though she alone faced Germany will there be a possibility of predicting why the end will come." So spoke Lord Derby, Britain's Secretary of State for War, after he had added emphatically: "The bigger blow America is able to deliver, the sooner she delivers it—the quicker will the war end and the new order of things be assured."

End Not Yet in Sight

The United Press Correspondent went to Lord Derby for some expression of belief on the duration of the war and of what part America should take in the fighting. He found the war secretary firmly of the belief that the end is not yet in sight. "America," he said, "has a big part to play in this struggle to abolish the world menace of militarism. America must strike hard. We hope she will strike quickly."

Here the British war head suddenly paused, swung about in his office, faced the blank wall of his office and reiterated, as though seeking to project his thought across the ocean—"This war will not be over until the full weight of America has been thrown into the scales. Her full weight—" he emphasized.

Huns Growing Weaker

"Don't let America be misled. Germany's active propaganda right now is directed to that purpose. In every way possible, Germany is throwing out the idea that the war's end is in sight. Germany would like this to be so."

"Germany has reached—if not passed—the crest of her military strength. She knows every day she is weaker by so many men."

"She is ready to quit—ON HER OWN TERMS."

"She is ready to fight a long, long time yet before accepting the terms that the world's democracy demands to safeguard the future."

"It has been and still will be a terrible fight. Lord Kitchener, sitting in his chair, said it would be a long war. Not until the British people felt themselves exerting their full strength did they realize how wisely he spoke."

Kitchener's Message

"May America's realization not be so long delayed—Kitchener's message rooms to Americans afresh. I hope they get that message." It was late in the evening Thursday that I first talked with Lord Derby. The room was slowly darkening. The war secretary, as he spoke these last words paused and smoked furiously and earnestly. His face and form was half hidden. In the haze of tobacco smoke and dusk of the room it was easy for the imagination to conjure up the piercing grey eyes of the silent "man who knew"—Kitchener—who, sitting at the same desk, fought and defeated British apathy when that effort seemed hopeless.

"Americans are quicker at some things than the British. Lord Derby resumed after a moment. "I believe America will get quicker start than we did—if the people appreciate the size of the job."

Training Of An Army

"Can the American army be trained as rapidly as the new units of the British army—that is, in three months?" was asked.

"There again, American quickness will probably show itself," the War secretary returned. "The fact that the British are now able to train men in three months is partly due to their drilling with seasoned organizations from the front."

"But I say that three months' training in America, plus a certain amount of necessary training in France would make the fittest kind of soldiers from entirely raw material."

"The matter of getting a small American contingent over here is one which American soldiers must decide for themselves, but I have no doubt of the effect it would have on the British. The French are less staid and it would affect them ever greater."

Would Inspire Russians

"What about Americans on the Russian front?" Lord Derby was asked.

"That is entirely a matter for soldiers to decide. It certainly could not fall to inspire the Russian people."

"That's another phase of this question of moral effect about which little has been said—and that is the effect on the German people when America actually takes the field. Think what it means. Many Germans have looked to America as a sort of heaven. Many have been struggling there. Now it will seem that the gates are closed. This on the German people may possibly be the most important single proof that they are the worst victims of the system for which they are being slaughtered to defend."

"No one can question the tremendous effect of the first appearance of an American army—however small—in the fighting line."

"But after all, that's not the main thing. That won't end the war."

"Not until America begins making war as though she alone faced Germany will there be a possibility of predicting when the end will come—and we know that is the spirit in which the American nation is taking up the conflict."
