The following resolution, moved by Councillor Morrison and seconded by Councillor Gorrill: "In view of the grave situation now existing in the Pacific Coast that the town council now in regular session ask the Dominion Government to take immediate steps to have all Japanese men, women and children whether Japanese Nationals or Japanese Canadian naturalized, interned east of the Rockies for the duration of the war". This resolution to be forwarded to the Minister of National Defense. S.

DON'T OVERDO POLITENESS

Exaggerated politeness points you out almost as surely as too little politeness, says Margaret Kernodle, writing on Common Courtesy.

Courtesy overdone appears more like awkward book-learning than graceful consideration of others. It makes you seem ill at ease and often leaves the other fellow uncomfortable as well.

Actions that put politeness into a prim and proper category often imply: "Custom demands this courtesy or I wouldn't be bothered with it."

A man sweeps his hat off his head, bows to every acquaintance on the street in a slightly Victorian manner which marks him as a town character.

A friend jumps up as if he were spring-operated, to seat someone who comes into his office. He seems over-anxious to please, and unsure of his own hospitality.

And there's the octopus handshake, which is no better acknowledgment of friendliness than the jellyfish handshake.

Of course, the solution to overdoing courtesy is to take it easy. Natural kindness and pleasant disposition will come to your aid in any correct but moderate manners campaign. And often you can assist the other fellow in his own adjustment to easy amenities.

landings on the northeast coast of that big island whose control is a prerequisite to assaulting east Australia.

Pore Moresby, principal city of the part-Dutch, part-Australian island, is only about 300 miles by air from Cape York on the Australian mainland.

The city, which has been raided sporadically in the past, reported some damage but no casualties in the attack on military installations by 10 big Japanese bombers.

The raid came less than 24 hours after strong forces of Japanese troops landed at Salamaua and Lae under a shower of bombs from low-flying Australian planes.

An Australian communique described the landing parties as clearly of considerable size.

Lae was shelled by a Japanese squadron of cruisers and destroyers and bombed from the air as a prelude to the landing.

These footholds, with others on the island of New Britain, give the Japanese command of Dampier strait, between New Guinea and New Britain and a natural sea gateway to the east coast of Australia, observers declared.

While some quarters said the Japanese might choose to attack India first, instead of pressing on against Australia and New Zealand, others said an attempt to subjugate Australia would be a better gamble now than after the United States and Britain have fully converted the continnent into a base for counter attacks.

H. J. Van Mook, Lieutenant Governor General of the Netherlands East Indies, who had reached Adelaide by plane, declared Monday he believed Japan's Axis allies would prefer her to move northward and westward—against Siberia and India—rather than southward against Australia.

He suggested the possibility that the Japanese might make nuisance attacks on Australian cities and supply centres because the distance involved would make a large-scale invasion difficult.

Port Darwin, Wyndham and Broome on the north and northwest coasts already have been bombed in the manner Van Mook mentioned.

(London sources, however, expressed belief that the Japanese were determined to lose none of the southward impetus of their Java offensive and said the same inferiority in the air which doomed Hong Kong, Singapore and the Indies would work to Australia's disadvantage at present.)

For defence, Van Mook recommended that Australians "try to get what we did not have—materials and fresh support," adding that "the best plan seems to be to try to cripple the enemy's sea forces and transport if it comes a long way from its bases. . ."

"There should be an end to retreating," he asserted.

Wheat And Feed

year 1942-43, an increase of 50,000,000 bushels over the total being accepted in 1941-42.

The wheat will be paid for at 90 cents a bushel, basis No. 1 Northern at Fort William, an increase of 20 cents a bushel over the 1941-42 price. The Minister has a bill before the House, which has received first reading, providing for this increased payment.

Both ministers made clear there was no intention of encouraging an enlarged wheat acreage to meet the enlarged quota of deliveries. They said the wheat acreage should remain about 20,000,000, the point it reached as a result of the wheat acreage reduction policy adopted in 1941.

The wheat acreage reduction payments program is being continued this year, with encouragement for coarse grains production retained. A bill covering this part of the program was introduced by Mr. Gardiner last week and has received first reading.

Submit Plan

To obtain increased production of three farm products, Mr. Gardiner submitted the following plan:—

1. A minimum price of 60 cents a bushel, basis in store Fort William, for Winnipeg barley futures as well as for all cash barley, basis No. 2 C.W. 6 row. The wheat board will carry out this policy and prepare regulations.

2. A minimum price for oats of 45 cents a bushel, basis in store Fort William, for Winnipeg oats futures as well as for all cash oats, basis No. 2 C.W. This policy will also be administered by the wheat board.

3. A fixed price for flaxseed of $2.25 a bushel, basis No. 1 C. W. in store Fort William. The Wheat Board will be empowered to purchase and handle all flaxseed delivered by producers in 1942-43.

Trading in futures and cash flax will be stopped on all Canadian markets at some date to be determined.

Maximum flaxseed production is sought as Canada and the United States must take steps to increase their production of vegetable oils to replace sources cut off by the war. Flaxseed assists production of animal fats which can be used as substitutes for vegetable oils.

Mr. Gardiner, in a review of agricultural prices, said it was evident that in most cases they had reached the level attained in the 1926-29 period. He said it was generally urged by organized agriculture that the government should have as its objective the establishment of prices for farm products equal at least to the level of that period.

Similar to 1926-29 Period

Where ceiling prices had been placed on farm products they were almost the same as those prevailing in 1926-29, and when increased volume was taken into account the return to the farmer was probably higher.

Floor prices of agricultural products were higher for the third year of the war than they were for 1941.

"Wheat and coarse grains are the two products which we have not yet advanced to prices which bear favorable comparison with the average prices for 1926-29," Mr. Gardiner said.

The problem of coarse grains was not so serious because much of this production was fed on the farm and when sold in the form of livestock or livestock products returned a price approximating that of 1926-29.

The average return for wheat in 1926-29 was $405,000,000, while in 1941, including all acreage payments, it was only $210,000,000.

"It is to improve the position of the farmer who depends largely upon wheat that the advance on wheat has been increased from 70 to 90 cents," Mr. Gardiner said.

The increased payment would represent an increase in revenue of a maximum of $56,000,000, "which will still leave the wheat farmer at least $175,000,000 below the 1926-29 level," he said.

Mr. Gardiner said the Government felt it would be a mistake to put the wheat acreage back to where it was in 1940. The acreage reduction in 1941 had been estimated at 9,000,000 acres and it was the desire to hold wheat acreage at "around 20,000,000 or 21,000,000 acres."

Describing the position of the wheat grower, Mr. Gardiner said a line drawn from Morden, Man., to Lloydminster, Sask., and another line from Lloydminster to Calgary and the international boundary, mapped the northern limits of an area in which it was difficult to produce anything in great volume but wheat.

"The important fact is that 1,000,000 people are living south of that line," Mr. Gardiner said. "South of that line you have cities such as Regina and Saskatoon and, over in the province of Alberta, Calgary and all of the other smaller cities which we have in Western Canada excepting the Province of Manitoba.

"When people are talking about closing up that area, as some are disposed to do, they are talking about taking care of 1,000,000 people; and if they are proposing to take care only of those who are on the farms, and on farms upon which only wheat can be grown to advantage, they are going to be asked to take care of at least 500,000 people.

"With that picture in front of us may I say that it is for these people, particularly, that 20 cents a bushel has been added to the advance which was placed upon wheat."

The farmers who had reduced their wheat land by 9,000,000 acres in 1941 had done so to help win the war.

"It took at least $100,000,000 out of their pockets, and we did not by any means put it all back in again," the Minister said. "We attempted to, it is true, but the poor crops of last year made that impossible."

Mr. Gardiner said that further regulations in connection with the program would be enacted by order-in-council to assist in the production of coarse grains and of flax.

The wheat program applies to the three Prairie Provinces and the chief wheat-producing areas in British Columbia.
