STRAIN ON YOUR EYES

Eyes used for close work—particularly if lighting is not correct—are subject to a greater than normal strain. This brings the patient discomfort if there is present any appreciable refractive error and shows itself in headaches, sore eyes, etc. A person has no way of knowing the degree of strain on the eyes until they are examined.

FREEDOM FOR TWO
 By MARGARET WATSON

"Well, hardly that; but we did more than half of Koranto, anyhow, two ridges above the camp. After that it is a bit risky by moonlight, so we turned back. His voice tried to be virtuous over the return, but for a second a faint shadow of disappointment crossed the gaiety of his face. He had thought of her, of course, wishing for him; and he had turned back much against his will. Again she felt the tremulous drift of estrangement between them, no thicker than gossamer, but disquieting.

"You needn't have come back on my account," she said instantly. "I should have wanted to go on and finish the job if I'd been there."

"She felt no compunction now over those indubitable lies. Martin said, rather deliberately: 'I was afraid you'd be worried.' 'I wasn't. I knew you'd want to go on with it, and I quite expected you would be late. If I'd been with you—

"Yes, but you weren't, and that makes it rather different, doesn't it? Supposing anything had gone wrong, and I'd been killed?"

"Martin!" she said with a cool little laugh of protest. "I don't see why we should suppose anything so horrid. Besides, I'm a fatalist. If anything's to happen, it will happen. And I trust you to look after yourself, but I don't want—ever—to be the cause of your abandoning all risky things. Life wouldn't be worth living if we were as tied to the commonplace here as I used to be in Brandford."

"Oh, well," said Martin. "I've climbed Koranto before. And anyhow, we're leaving today."

Erica sprang upright in bed, with a cry which would have done equally well for disappointment or joy. "Leaving? But Martin, I didn't know what's the use of staying now you're crooked? All the pleasures of this place are active. We'll go on somewhere that we can just look at pictures, or listen to music; and then, I suppose we shall have to go home."

So they said goodbye to Dalgano that day. There was some exclamation from all their friends about the haste of their departure; but Erica was not sorry to be going home, and Martin, now that she could not share his activities and he meant in enjoying them alone, was only too glad to turn his back upon the mountains and rush for fresh scenes.

Jon Bernston was the last to say goodbye to them; and he brought for Erica the day's paper, published in Dalgano.

"You may like to be reminded of this place sometime," he said, "and to remember the race you won here. There's your name, look in nice large letters. When you let yourself be reminded of Dalgano, I hope you won't entirely exclude me from the picture."

Erica said with sincerity: "I shan't. You've been very kind."

Not until they were rocking down-hill in the train did she open the paper and explore the day's news. There was not very much of it, which perhaps accounted for the prominence given to one column. She was reading it when Martin, stretched out upon the opposite seat, asked in the negligent way of one who expects nothing: "Well, has anything been happening?"

"Yes, there's been a robbery. In Dalgano itself, at one of those private houses of the fabulously rich."

were, securely encoined in a very comfortable flat, less satisfactory than a house, perhaps, because so much less suggestive of stability, but none the less unexpectedly delightful.

The honeymoon was over, then: Paris was over, and Rome, and Dalgano, all the journeyings and excitements, all the changes and surprises. Was it possible that, in her heart of hearts, she was glad to have all these things over? For there was certainly something in her mind which felt very like relief.

She had genuinely loved every moment of her tour of Europe; it had been like a glorious dream. Yes, that was it; it seemed now no more real, no more filling, than the stuff of dreams, whereas this commonplace little corner of London was the fabric of reality.

They had spent what to her seemed the most delectable hours of her life in choosing the fittings for their home. Martin, to be sure, had chosen a little, and been inclined to leave the selection entirely to her; but he had looked upon the finished product, and found it good. She looked round at the sunny lawn-brown room, and felt a proprietorial pride in everything in it, from Martin's piano to the green maroonie book-ends on the corner table, and the little black hawk Horus falcon on the mantelpiece. There were golden-brown cushions, the deep rich brown of leather-bound books upon the walls, a few good copies of Murray's etchings of Paris, which they had bought together on the third day of their honeymoon. But the piano had pride of place, like a stately household god to which all the rest of the room bowed down.

supplies for hot lunch for the winter months. Three members paid dues. The resolution to the T. E. League was discussed and endorsed. A sum of money was given for the School Fair prizes. The "Better Schools" and "Public Health" questionnaires which were in charge of Miss Grace MacDougall and Mrs. Angus Murchison, respectively, were fully discussed and filled. A contest on "Authors" was put on by Miss MacDougall and prizes won by Miss MacPhee and Mrs. J.D. Murchison.

Meeting closed with "Home Sweet Home". Lunch was served and a social hour followed.

NEW LONDON W. I.

The regular monthly meeting of the New London Women's Institute met at Mrs. Mont MacEwen's home on January 13th with twenty members and three visitors present. The president presided, and the meeting opened by singing the Institute Ode followed by the Creed in unison. The roll call was responded to by the president and modern methods in bringing up the child. After the reading of the School Committee's report, it was decided that purchase four new window shades for the school before the next meeting. A bill was presented for coffee and sugar used by the school children. The Sick Committee had made five calls and had taken fruit to six people, and a box of chocolates had been sent to a friend in the Sanatorium at Christmas time. All bills were moved, seconded and carried to be paid. There were letters read by the Secretary conveying thanks to the members for fruit, etc., and different members expressed their appreciation for fruit received. The treasurer reported that $25.65 was the amount of proceeds from the Christmas concert. The following papers on Child Welfare were read, parent puzzlers in perspective, Food and its relation to health. The best time to remove tonsils, also a poem Wee Moderns and the questionnaire was discussed. Mrs. H. Whitehead in charge. Miss Hazel Carr gave interesting little talk on the short course which she attended in Kensington, she seemed to be particularly interested in the case of the sick and the infant. Mrs. Dan McKay and Mrs. Foster Dunning are the program committee for the next meeting which will be at the home of Mrs. Fred MacEwen. Legislation is the main topic for discussion. Mrs. Wilbur McKay in charge and roll call to be answered by prayers.

Obstinate coughs and colds generally yield to the grateful, soothing action of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. It is indicated for this kind of a cough, as it is composed of the most soothing and healing expectorant herbs, roots and balsams obtainable.

Mr. HARRY LANE, Lakeville, N.B. writes:—"I had such a terrible cough I could not sleep at night. I tried different medicines, but they never helped me; my cough still hung on. I then got Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, and I was surprised to see how quickly my cough disappeared."

Put up by The T. Milburn Co., Ltd.

The program for the evening was a contest put on by Miss Miriam Currie and Miss Hazel Carr and enjoyed by all. Collection $12. After the singing of the National Anthem and the serving of refreshments, the meeting adjourned.
