Japs to supply Names of war Prisoners taken

OTTAWA, Jan. 19.—(CP)—Although the Japanese Government was not a party to the prisoners of war convention of 1929 it has set up a prisoners of war information bureau whose office in Tokyo will send lists of British and Canadian troops taken prisoner at Hong Kong and elsewhere to the international Red Cross at Geneva, the External Affairs Department announced late today.

No indication was given when the first such list might be expected, but the department said any information received by the Red Cross will be sent at once to Ottawa.

The National Defence Department said some days ago that it was anticipated information on Canadian casualties at Hong Kong also might be made available through the Red Cross, and this seemed borne out by tonight's External Affairs statement which said:

"Before any lists are published the next-of-kin of each prisoner of war and casualty will be notified by the appropriate department of national defence."

War—25 Years Ago Today

(By The Canadian Press)

JAN. 21, 1917—Kut-el-Amara on River Tigris cleared of enemy troops by Gen. Sir Stanley Maude's Mesopotamian force. Canadians made successful raid south of the river on the Western Front. Further British success in East Africa reported.

The first stanza of "Follow the Glean."

Mrs. E. H. MacKinnon conducted the service, and Mrs. W. C. Pickett the Candlelight Ceremony. The responsive reading was led by Miss Elia Herring and the Scripture was read by Miss Prudence James. Miss Geraldine Bell and Jacqueline Murdock took up the offering. Three special numbers, an anthem by the choir a duet by Mrs. MacKinnon and Miss Reta Chapman and a solo by Miss Alice Chapman, contributed much to the atmosphere of worship. The Swedish legend, "The Sacred Flame," was read by Mrs. Pickett, who, from the large candle on the pulpit held the candles of the girls nearest her. Each girl in turn lit the candle of the girl next to her until all the candles were lighted. After responsive reading and prayer, the girls moved slowly down the two aisles of the church, and back to the altar, where, in the glowing candlelight they softly sang the last stanza of "Follow the Glean."

GREENDALS 99 QUEEN

It Happened Twice

BY T. C. BRIDGES

"Listen, Ruth! He and I plan to go on a six months' cruise. Then we shall go to his place in Devonshire to live. I am sending most of my staff there, for Edgar, who seems to have been very extravagant, has got rid of his mother's servants."

"I want you to go down there to Coombe Royal—that's the name of the place—and get everything ready. You will have plenty of time and plenty of help and I shall of course give you a free hand."

Peggy drew a long breath. To be down at Coombe Royal again in her beloved Devonshire; to be close to John Arkwright! Then the shield turned. No, the risk was impossible; she would be recognized. She shook her head.

"It only means putting off the evil day. Better to make the break at once."

"There's not going to be any break," said Althea with unusual firmness. "But now you are tired and excited so I'm not going to let you talk any more to-night. Good night, my dear."

Peggy had no sleeping draught to help her that night. She lay and tossed miserably thinking and thinking but always coming to a blind end. Towards morning she dozed and awoke to find a maid with her dainty breakfast.

There was a letter on the tray. "Peggy, dear," Isabel wrote. "The judge said it ought to have been given to you. I'm very miserable, Peggy, and longing to see you."

That letter turned the scale. Whatever happened, Isabel should not go short. When Althea came up an hour later Peggy told her that she would go to Coombe Royal. Althea's face lit up. She stooped and kissed Peggy.

"My dear, I knew you'd be sensible," she said.

Cold, hunger Add suffering In Europe

(By Frank Brutto) (Associated Press Staff Writer)

BERNE, Jan. 19.—(AP)—Cold and hunger, the twin plagues of Arctic war, gradually are taking heavy tolls among the people of many European nations.

"Difficult sorrowful" are words used to describe Finland's plight. The Stockholm correspondent of the Basel National Zeitung writes that depression has replaced the optimism with which Finland entered the second war with Russia, hoping it would be over before the winter set in.

"Almost nobody had counted on the necessity of a winter campaign," he said.

The nation lost 60,000 dead and wounded of its 4,000,000 population in the first war with Russia in 1939-40. Now it is bent under the enormous burden of a second war.

Both at home and at the front, the lack of food is one of the country's chief concerns. Rationing is constantly increasing.

Each person's meat ration for the entire month of January has been reduced 50 per cent, or to an amount equaling one chop.

The same pattern of hunger and want is found in Croatia whose glowing plans as an Axis godchild have been shelved by the immediate problem of daily bread.

During the first nine months of so-called Croat independence—April to December—food prices increased sharply. For example, butter prices increased 210 per cent, pork 250 per cent, grain 100 per cent, and fat 100 per cent.

Of all the countries which have experienced war, writes the Gazette De Lausanne, "none is suffering as much as Greece" where "one of the most atrocious dramas of history is unfolding."

Isolated from the rest of the continent, Greece of all Europe is suffering most from the blockades. The Gazette De Lausanne says: "There is no longer a trace of oil or other fats, while cereals, meat, potatoes, eggs and sugar have vanished completely from the markets"

DEHORNING CATTLE

We wish every farmer in the land could read what we are writing. It would be so far as farmers are humane and wise, save a vast amount of suffering and no little money. Leaving out of the account the whole question of cruelty in the dehorning process and the reasons assigned for depriving the cattle of these weapons of attack and defense, admitting the greater docility of the individual animal and the herd when hornless, why wait till dehorning must be done by method that cause pain and involve expense?

In Ireland for a long time the requirement has been enforced, if
