LUCKY HORSESHOES

Why do we regard horseshoes as lucky? Many people believe that the superstition comes from the sea-god Neptune, whose horses were looked upon as sacred. A horseshoe picked up on the road was supposed to belong to one of them.

But the truth is that the horse is the national animal of the English people. The first Saxons who came to England were Hengist and Horsa, both of whose names mean horse.

Smiths were regarded with peculiar reverence, since theirs was held to be almost a sacred art.

Do not forget that a horseshoe is lucky only if its points face you as you find it, for luck streams out from them. If it is lying the other way, walk round it until you are opposite the points; then pick it up and carry it with the points uppermost.

Nail it on your door in the same position. Gold fortune will then be showered—so says the old belief—over your house. If the points are downward as it hangs on the door, the lucky influences will pass into the earth and be lost.

ALPHABET IN BIBLE VERSE

In the twenty-first verse of the seventh chapter of Ezra can be found every letter of the English alphabet. It runs thus: "And I, even I, Artaxerxes the king, do make a decree to all the treasurers which are beyond the river that whatsoever Ezra the priest, the scribe of the law of the God of heaven, shall equire of you, it be done speedily." But, still more wonderful, in the eighth verse of the third chapter of Zephaniah is contained every letter, including finals, of the Hebrew language.—Westminster Gazette.

ANCIENT GLASSMAKING

When the council of ten ruled Venice they issued a decree regarding the art of glassmaking. It runs: "If a workman carry his art beyond the limits of his country to the detriment of the republic, he shall be desired to return. If he disobey, his nearest relatives shall be imprisoned. If, in spite of their imprisonment, he remain obstinate in his wish to live abroad, an embassy shall be told off to kill him."

Cast The Leaves

Into the boiling water, instead of pouring the boiling water over them—this is the interesting new way of making tea. Have you tried it?

Fill a saucupan with fresh water. Bring it to a boil. Remove the cover and toss some Blue Bird Tea into the boiling water. Replace the cover and remove the saucupan immediately.

MAN'S OLDEST PROBLEM

The housing problem which Canada in common with other parts of the world has no such thing since the war is not a new thing of this century. It seems to be as old as the history of human habitation.

In Phoenicia and the ancient Orient the price of building lots must have been high. Still worse were matters in ancient Rome. Especially in the time of the emperors people flocked there from all parts of the vast empire, and as there were no transportation facilities there could be no very great extension of the zone of house building. As a consequence, there was congestion, rents were constantly raised, and there was much agitation of the people.

In the year 47 B. C. the pretor, Marcus Caelius Rufus, enacted a law that released tenants of a year's rent. It is not known what success this had. But the privilege was renewed by Caesar and later by Emperor Augustus, with the restriction that the rent edict should refer only to habitations the rental of which in Rome, did not exceed 2,000 sesterces, and in smaller towns not 500. Juvenal complains that for the rent one had to pay in Rome for a wretched dwelling one could obtain a magnificent villa with a garden in the provinces. They could not think of an ex-actor of the Forum, for the simple reason that the sum of big houses would have to be expropriated, which in view of prices of real estate would have meant an enormous expenditure.

As old as the housing problem itself is also the effort to meet it by preventing the arbitrary raising of rents by the landlords. Thus the early popes proceeded most radically in combatting such extor- tions. Julius II and Paul III, became known for such action. Under Pope Alexander III, a decree was issued requiring the reduction of the rent of a habitation. A decree of the year 824 forbade all proprietors of houses, and stores in Rome, no matter how the lease read, under any pretext to drive the tenant into the street, least of all for non-payment of rent.

THE SILKWORM

The silkworm spins its dainty product by emitting through tiny apertures in its tail a glutinous fluid which immediately, in contact with the air, coagulates into a thread. If a fluid of the same composition could be manufactured, women would no longer be obliged to depend upon a humble caterpillar for their finest dress materials, but chemists have tried in vain to imitate it.

Accordingly, a very pure cellulose is used instead, and the machinery employed in the manufacture of artificial silk is patterned after that of the silkworm, the fluid (held in a tank) being forced by air-pressure through nozzles which are glass tubes drawn so fine that their apertures have a diameter of only 1-800 of a millimeter. It coagulates into threads on exposure to air, and is reeled just as natural silk is reeled from cocoons. By increasing the size of the apertures through which the cellulose solution is forced, artificial hair is produced for upholstery, hats, etc. By changing the apertures to narrow slits an artificial straw is obtained. By the use of wider slits an artificial leather is produced, or a sort of cloth. This process is made to yield the thin transparent sheets used for facing envelopes (the address showing through) and for wrapping candles.

Artificial silk net and simple forms of silk lace are produced by pouring the cellulose solution into engraved lines on a revolving steel cylinder, from which the product is continuously peeled as it issues from a fixing bath.

There has been, ever since the war, a greatly increased demand for artificial silk in this country. We now manufacture 80 per cent. of all that we consume, and a single American concern will produce more than 10,000,000 pounds of it during the present year. The bulk of it goes into stockings, but it finds, of course, many other uses, four big flappers swam eagerly to the bank, barking loudly, and half a dozen others flopped off the rocks where they were reposing and hurried to join the group.

Then the whole bunch lifted their glistening bodies out of the water and listened in fascinated silence. When Sir Harry started his chuckling laughter, which burst later into a rollicking display of mirth, the creatures started barking in chorus. Presently one of the biggest of them pulled himself ashore, waddled up to the instrument, and thrust his whiskers close to the trumpet of the gramophone. He remained until the record was finished, and then went splashing back to his comrades, barking his joy and astonishment.

Tigers seemed partial to more classical music. A piece from one of Verdi's operas appealed to them, and they stood in a staccato group listening to the melting strains. "Home, Sweet Home" was played to the Polar bears. They gave great gasping sighs, but when the Guards' band struck up a lively march they paced around their terrace and seemed to enjoy it hugely. The machine was then taken to the Parrot House, where there is always a terrible noise. All kinds of tunes were tried, but no effect was noticeable. Parrots and cockatoos remained until the record was finished, and then went splashing back to his comrades, barking his joy and astonishment. Tigers seemed partial to more classical music. A piece from one of
