IN MEMORIAM

MRS. FRANK ROACH

"Then fell upon that house a sudden gloom,
A shadow on those features fair and thin,
And softly, from that hushed and darkened room,
Two angels issued, where but one went in."

The people of St. Joseph's Parish, Kelly's Cross, were saddened on Sunday afternoon, July 21st, when it was learned that the soul of Mrs. Frank Roach had passed to its Eternal reward. The deceased, whose maiden name was Ada Trainor, was a daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Trainor of Kelly's Cross. She was only forty-two years old, and many years of life were to be expected of her, but God willed otherwise. Although her life had seen its share of sorrow and death, her gentle manner, her cheerfulness and trust in God never grew less. "To live, in hearts we leave behind is not to die," and although she has gone, her memory will ever be an abiding power, to help and strengthen those who mourn.

Although the deceased had been in delicate health for some time, still no serious thought was entertained about her, and never had she seemed stronger, nor in more cheerful spirits, than one the day when she was stricken with what proved to be her last illness. It was on July 17th, and all that competent medical aid could do was done to alleviate her sufferings; but she continued to sink, despite all the care and loving ministrations of her devoted family. During her illness she was consoled by the visits of her devoted pastor, Rev. Clarence Pitre, who administered the last rites of the Church, fortifying the passing soul.

Besides a sorrowing husband, she leaves to mourn, two sisters, Etta in Kelly's Cross; Charlotte, (Mrs. W. J. Darion, Battleford, Sask.; three brothers, Bennett and Levi in Kelly's Cross and Walter in Edmonton, Alta., also a niece, Mrs. Leo B. Doyle, Charlottetown.

Her funeral was held on Tuesday morning, July 23rd, to St. Joseph's Church, Kelly's Cross. High Mass of Requiem was sung by Rev. Clarence Pitre, P.P., Rev. Father Cass being in the Sanctuary. Interment was made in the family plot. The large number in attendance was a silent tribute of respect to the memory of the deceased, as were also the many spiritual offerings received. The pall bearers were: Jos. A. Bradley, Jas. D. Flood, Jos. Kelly, John Campbell, John A. McDonald, Joseph Hogan.

Carrying a cargo of timber for Boston, they will be rigged like a freight train with one towing the other. The experiment is attracting attention because the system allows a double cargo to be carried without an increase in power and maintenance expense.

Liberal Leader At Kingston Speaks "In All Humility"

opposing the tendencies to autocracy now in evidence.

The City of Kingston, said Mr. King, had an intimate association with the life of his grandfather, William Lyon MacKenzie. It was in Kingston the rebel leader had met and married Mr. King's grandmother and in which he lived for a time after his return from exile.

"He was more fortunate than I in finding a life partner," said Mr. King. "But perhaps I was more fortunate than he in that I have never had a price put on my head."

To the war veterans of Canada Mr. King said he could point with pride to the record of the Liberal party in its nine years in office. That was the test of the Liberal attitude towards war veterans. He had said then and said now that so long as there was a war veteran left in Canada a Liberal Government would not forget his service.

One of the first things a Liberal Government would do would be to inquire into the administration of penitentiaries and see if some reforms could not be affected. The people knew, he said, that where trouble in one penitentiary followed trouble in another there must be something wrong in methods of administration.

Third Parties

Mr. King then referred to the "peril" of third parties attempting to run the country in days of stress; the "greater peril" of a national government springing up and the "still greater peril" of dictatorship. In his radio speeches, Mr. King said he referred to each of these but would elaborate on the third tonight.

In the last five years the trend in Canada had been away from parliamentary rule. The issue today was between democracy and dictatorship or parliamentary rule as against cabinet rule. In the last five years he had been appalled by some of the legislation introduced by the Bennett Government and which the Liberals were forced to accept against their wishes and desires. It was only when these acts were taken as a whole it was noticed how liberties had been taken away and how Canada was to a "precipice of complete change in our government system which assures our liberty."

Instead of winning the goodwill of nations, Mr. Bennett raised tariffs to the highest point in history and deliberately angered them, the Liberal Leader charged. Not even Sir John MacDonald, the author of the protectionist system in Canada ever dreamed the tariff would be raised as high as Mr. Bennett set it. It was raised not only against foreign nations but against the United Kingdom as well.

Relief Legislation Criticized

As one of the "dictatorial actions" of Mr. Bennett, Mr. King instanced the blank cheque relief legislation, which set no limits on expenditures. Not even in war days was this necessary, said Mr. King. The Prime Minister had said it would only be temporary but the legislation was continued year after year, being in effect even today. Under that system, a remedy for an emergency became the established order. Under the guise of relief, banks were guaranteed against loss, Newfoundland was financed.

Another instance of dictatorial power by Mr. Bennett was the 'peace, order and good government' legislation, Mr. King said—a further instance of the subordination of Parliament. It was the same sort of thing that Hitler did in Germany and Mussolini in Italy and for the same reason—to deal with emergencies. Even today, with Parliament prorogued, Mr. Bennett and his cabinet could do almost anything they liked simply by passing an Order-in-Council under that legislation. They could do it even when Parliament was dissolved.

Similarly, said Mr. King the government did away with parliamentary control over the Canadian National Railways. Formerly the board of directors of the railway were responsible to parliament through the government. But Mr. Bennett had abolished parliamentary control by abolishing the board of directors and appointing trustees for a fixed number of years. The president of the board could only be removed by approval of the two House of Parliament and the Senate was now overwhelmingly Tory. What control, he asked, had the representatives of the people now over the Canadian National Railways.

The government had shown a similar disregard for parliamentary control by setting up the Bank of Canada. The Liberal party believed in a national central bank to control credit and currency in the national interest but not the type of bank Mr. Bennett had created. He had taken the gold reserves from the federal treasury, the backing for the country's currency and turned them over to a private corporation. The government had no representative on the board of the bank except a deputy minister who had no vote. The governor and his deputy were appointed for a fixed number of years and could not be ousted by popular will.

Ottawa Trade Pacts

The Empire trade agreements were another instrument for flouting the will of parliament, said Mr. King. Under the agreements in many instances the intermediate tariff had been raised to the level of the general. This had made it more difficult to negotiate trade agreements with other countries should a new government try to negotiate.

Further, the agreements required a fixed margin of preference for British countries should always be maintained. This meant that parliament could not lower the tariff beyond that margin while the agreements remained in force.

For the last two or three years, the time seemed ripe to negotiate a trade treaty with Washington, Mr. King said. Every time the subject was brought up in parliament, Mr. Bennett said discussion would retard progress.

It was the practice of Mussolini and Hitler to centralize autority in themselves just as Mr. Bennett had surrounded himself with power, Mr. King said. Even when the Conservative leader committed his party to a new reform policy, he did it on his own authority without consulting his followers or cabinet colleagues.

Mr. Bennett was hanging on to office to the last minute, Mr. King said. "Let me say to those who say the constitution is impeding progress: do you realize you would not have an election this year without the constitution which says parliament must be dissolved within the next eleven days."

Marketing Act

Turning to the Marketing Act, Mr. King said it also took away political and individual freedom. The Liberal party did not object to state assistance in marketing. It realized it was necessary. But it objected to the creation of a great bureaucracy "made up of Tory appointees" and the usurption of personal liberties under the guise of extending marketing facilities. Crimes and imprisonments could be established under the act, not by parliament or even the cabinet, but by boards responsible to no one. The boards were not elective representatives but self-interested persons.

The Marketing Act applied not only to producers but manufacturers of national products as well, Mr. King said. This permitted manufacturers to set up monopolies "and they are doing it today. Where will we be five years from now under that sort of legislation?"

Under the Marketing Act Mr. Bennett had taken control of the whole trade of Canada to the governor-in-council which meant Mr. Bennett himself, said the Liberal leader. The government had power to regulate restrict or prohibit the export or import of any natural product. This gave it complete control of external and internal trade.

After 10 by-elections had gone against the government, Mr. Bennett made up his mind he would hold no more, Mr. King said. At the end of the last session, which considered far-reaching legislation, there were seven ridings without members. It was denying the people their right to be represented while taxed. In the same way, there were 17 vacancies in the Senate, a legislative branch. The Liberal leader charged Mr. Bennett had used the empty Senate seats as a whip over his followers, telling them they would become ineligible if they publicly spoke their minds.

"It is the flood that counts," Mr. King continued. It was not a marketing act in itself or the invasion of provincial rights, although dangerous in themselves, that counted. It was when scores of acts were taken together that it was noticed "we have come to the moment where our parliamentary government is at an end." If the dictatorship was carried to its conclusion, people would be refused the vote.

Hitlerism arose in the name of social reform, Mr. King continued. But today in Canada, farmers could be topsped from exporting their goods or even growing them without doing as the Government said. "Are we going to let those things go on?" he asked.

Police interferance with the relief strikers was "a direct invasion of provincial rights," said Mr. King. The Government of Saskatchewan was quite capable of handling the situation. It just went to show "how blind a dictatorship becomes," even on the eve of an election.

"As you think of the election to come," said Mr. King, "ask yourselves that little question 'whither are we tending.' Think of what has happened and ask yourselves if we are making of Canada a second Italy, a second Germany or a second Russia."

Mosquito Plague In Manitoba

(C. P. By Guardian's Special Wire)

WINNIPEG, Aug. 7.—A mosquito plague equal to anything in the memory of the oldest of the old timers brought suffering to Manitobans today. Neither man nor beast was immune to the pesky stingers.

Mosquitoes were blamed for a mysterious disease among horses reported by Manitoba Agricultural Department officials to be taking heavy toll in the province.

The disease, known as encephalomyelitis, produces inflammation of the brain and spinal cord. The animals reel drunkenly and most of those infected die. Mosquitoes were believed to be the germ carriers.

To make matters worse for animals and humans, there was a growing suspicion something new in the way of mosquito species has appeared on the scene. Bites this year are reported to be worse than anything ever experienced here.

RUMORS RIFE RE CABINET CHANGES

Political Circles At Ottawa Speculate On Appointments.

(C.P. By Guardian's Special Wire)

OTTAWA, Aug. 7—Cabinet rebuilding, election planning and distribution of the numerous gifts of Senate, judicial and administrative posts at the disposal of the government, were reaching a climax on Parliament Hill today. It was intimated in official circles that these tasks would all be completed this week, while Prime Minister R. B. Bennett stated definitely that the Canadian Wheat Board and several other appointments would be announced within two days.

It is generally believed that before the end of the week Mr. Bennett will announce parliament has been dissolved and writs issued for the general election. There is nothing in the statute requiring the two operations to be effected at the same time. But in the last seven general elections and in every case so far as can be learned, dissolution of the Dominion Parliament and issue of election writs have been carried out at the same time.

Not Necessarily Followed

This is not so true of the provinces and an illustration was given in the recent British Columbia general elections when writs were not issued until some weeks after dissolution.

The period which may elapse between dissolution and polling is not fixed by statute and is left to the good judgment of the government, guided by the Dominion elections officer who requires sufficient time to complete the technical and clerical preliminaries. When amendments to the Franchise Act were being considered in the House of Commons last winter it was stated that with the proposed new system of maintaining a standing voters' list it would be possible to call a general election within 28 days.

Distribution of the revised basic voters' lists will have been completed in a few days and it would be possible to have an election within one month, at most, of the date the present parliament lapses, Aug. 18, if it were not dissolved sooner. In the event of dissolution coming this week it would be easily possible to name a date for polling around the middle of September.

Cabinet Rumors

Speculation as to the cabinet changes which are certain to come before the campaign opens, if not within the present week, rumors the transfer of Hon. Maurice Dupre from the office of Solicitor General to succeed Hon. Alfred Duranleau as Minister of Marine. A member of a leading firm of Montreal lawyers is said to be considering entry to the cabinet to succeed Mr. Dupre.

This would mean that Onesime Gagnon, member for Dorchester, who was said to have been slated for a cabinet post, would probably take another appointment, and elevation of Sam Gobeil, member for Compton, to the post-office portfolio vacated by Hon. Arthur Sauve who goes to the Senate.

Hon. Hugh Guthrie, Minister of Justice, is expected to be named this week as either chairman of the board of railway commissioners or to the Ontario bench, and probably the former where a vacancy has existed for a long time. The name of Hon. J. L. Bowman, Speaker of the House of Commons is the only one so far prominently mentioned for that portfolio.

Mr. Bennett is seeking some prominent business and financial man for the post of Minister of Finance vacated by the elevation of Hon. E. N. Rhodes to the Senate but it is possible this portfolio will go to a present member of the House, probably from Ontario. It is known that Thomas Bradshaw, Toronto insurance head, had been approached but there was said to be little likelihood of his divesting himself of his numerous interests to enter politics for the first time at a stage in life well past middle-age.

FINANCIERS UNDER-FIRE BY STEVENS

(C. P. By Guardian's Special Wire)

KAMLOOPS, Aug. 7.—Piling up of interest by financiers while thousands of men are idle was condemned here today by Hon. H. H. Stevens. "Another five years will find us all strangled by debt and interest," the Leader of the Reconstruction Party declared in his first Kamloops speech.

To a large audience here last night Mr. Stevens put the question: "How is it that everyone who produces, lost money, and the only persons who made money made it out of dividends?" There must be a general clear-cut policy for lowering interest rates of interest, particularly to farmers, he said.

During the past 24 years, Mr. Stevens stated, machinery had literally ploughed millions of workers into unemployment. "We have not faced that problem." Agricultural and industrial workers, the white collared classes, merchants, all were suffering. But the financiers, although wages had declined were from 1930 to 1934 paying more income tax.

"Under the present circumstances we can't ask the youth of Canada to be content when all they get is food, water and shelter. Why, we would give an ox that."

The discussion in Parliament over the Regina riots, one leader discussing enforcement of law, the other questioning the constitutionality of Federal interference, Mr. Stevens described as "one of the most staggering experiences I ever had in Parliament." Not one member of the old line parties discussed the basic causes of the difficulty, he declared.

From the report of the Price Spreads Commission, Mr. Stevens presented data on wage conditions and the situation in agriculture and the packing industry. He outlined the designed correctives contained in his manifesto and declared, "we must turn our attention to the same remedies of this internal trouble.'

"Your duty as citizens is to send men and women to Ottawa who are not tied by pre-election promises at St. James Street," concluded the Reconstruction Party Leader.

Field Commissioner Warren had a very successful visit to Borden on Friday when he put the new troop of Boy Scouts and Pack of Wolf Cubs through their preliminary facings. The 1st Borden Troop has been organized with Scoutmaster A. P. Ceretti in charge and LeRoy Sherry and Geo. Ceretti as assistants. The 1st Borden Pack of Wolf Cubs have Mrs. Reg. Rogers as Cubmaster, and Albert Jay and James Campbell as assistants. Considerable Scout enthusiasm prevails, and Borden bids fair to be one of the most successful scouting centres in the Province.

Appeals have been received from boys in Kensington, Crapaud and Kinkora for the formation of troops, and provided sufficient interest be evinced by seniors in the movement, Commissioner Warren will visit the districts at an early date.
