Pimples On Face Humiliated Her

Miss Frances Lodge, R. R. No. 8, Dunville, Ont., writes:—"I used to feel very humiliated whenever I would go to town, on account of the breaking out of pimples on my face, caused from impure blood. Now all that has vanished and I have not been bothered since I took part of a bottle of your wonderful medicine, Burdock Blood Bitters."

PERMANENT FACE-SWELLING FINALLY TRACED TO NEURALGIA

The experience of Mrs. E. J. Barker of 120 Alice Street, Guelph, was an interesting one. "I suffered with dreadful pains all over my face. Although I tried many medicines, my face remained badly swelled. A lady friend recommended Nerviline. Her experience has been very satisfactory. I used Nerviline with great benefit myself. I rubbed Nerviline over the neuragic part of my face and covered it with a piece of red flannel. Nerviline ended all my trouble, and I recommended it highly for rheumatism, painful joints, swellings, lumbago, coughs and colds. I think it is a necessity in every home."

NERVILINE Gives Out Pain

SELWOOD OF SLEEPY CAT

Selwood raised his voice. "Atkins!" he said. "Look here a minute." Atkins glanced stupidly over at the three, who stood with their eyes on him. "Come over here, Atkins," said Selwood again. The expression of Atkins' face promised a poor response to the curt request. "I guess it's about as far from me over to you as it is from you over to me," he suggested, making a move to rise. Selwood wasted no time. He walked straight toward Atkins, who started up in alarm as Selwood briskly approached. "It may not be any farther one way than the other," retorted Selwood, "but you've picked the expensive way. I was willing to let you keep part of your stealings—now you and Bartoe hand out six hundred dollars you robbed this lad of at monte."

Men crowded up. Selwood knew every one of them. He knew about what each represented in the way of danger. But he abated nothing whatever of his aggressive insistence. Atkins, sullen and evasive, denying and threatening by turns, was for standing pat, as he had often done before. Bartoe, with better judgment, realized the man they had to deal with. Selwood gave little heed to the war of words kindled by his arbitrary attitude—the only sort of an effective one with the ruffians he was facing. When Atkins had wearied himself with brave words, Bartoe, encouraged by Selwood's silence, intervened more boldly himself. Selwood put up his hand to check both.

"Atkins," he said, without raising his voice, "this isn't the only score I've got to settle with you, but I'll settle this now. You robbed this fellow; you're going to pay him back every dollar you took. Now I'm done with you for the present—shut up, Bartoe!" he turned on the accomplice. "If the six hundred isn't up on my table close by eleven o'clock tonight, I'll close this joint in the morning and run you out of town—or, what's just as good, I'll give you a chance to run me out. Just get together friends—no, don't talk back. You've said it all. Starbuck. Why, yes, call in Starbuck, by all means." Selwood hardly took the trouble to laugh at the threats flung at him. "Yes, I know that, too. Just as much a gambler as you are? Well! Selwood caught his breath in pleasant acknowledgment. "I hope," he said—"for the honor of a dishonorable profession—that I am more of one. Anyway, if you want a real game in the morning, with Starbuck for an opener, you know now just exactly how to get it."

Starbuck Intervenes A wrangle between Bartoe and Atkins followed Selwood's departure—forced and acrimonious on Atkins' counseled defiance. But Bartoe reminded him sullenly that he had nothing whatever at stake. Atkins had nothing more to do than strike the trail for fresh pastures—he was reputed to carry his roll all in his pocket—and come back to his barn when things blew over; whereas Bartoe faced the immediate loss of his whole establishment. And in the heat of their quarrel Starbuck, the man whose name had been thrown menacingly at Selwood, walked bluffly in on the angry men.

"Yes, Harry told me Selwood had been here," Starbuck named as "Harry," fat, busy Harry Barbanet who by dint of some crafty business about, some skillful eavesdropping, and the exercise of some extraordinary instinct, had possessed himself of the whole story and "scoped" the house by getting first with it to Starbuck's ear. "I know all about what he wanted," continued Starbuck. "What're you going to do?" His appearance had a quieting effect on the disputants to the degree that they left off abusing each other and turned together to abuse Starbuck. Still in his early thirties, Starbuck, well built, frank in manner, more than equal in suave speech to the worthies in Sleepy Cat and game in such local encounters as had befallen him, enjoyed an accredited reputation in the River quarter. Not unpleasing in feature—rather light of complexion and alert in bearing, he was looked to as a local arbiter of River quarter difficulties and was no over-derisive name of Sleepy Cat, a name that became the favorite was only a nominal part of Sleepy Cat politics and Starbuck held the title principally by acclamation, so to speak; and held it successfully against other possible claimants. "What are we going to do?" echoed Bartoe. "We can't do anything without a fight—and nobody can tell how a fight's going to come out. Go talk to Selwood yourself, Starbuck. Is he running this town or are you?" "What are we paying a mayor for?" demanded Atkins, unpleasantly significant. Starbuck silenced his nervous batters by confining a few brief remarks strictly to one-syllable words. Then, tarrying only long enough to absorb all pertinent details of the row, he strode up street to interview Selwood.

Starbuck realized the delicate position in which Selwood's action left him. Two bosses could not exist at the same time in Sleepy Cat, and there was in the situation this further element of uncertainty that Starbuck wanted to solve. He knew Selwood but slightly and knew him chiefly as a man who minded strictly his own business. Did he mean now to aspire for local leadership? Starbuck hoped not but wanted to know.

He bent his steps straight forward Selwood, who stood smoking while he watched with mild interest the play at a table where a new dealer sat installed. "Selwood?" said Starbuck, inquiringly, putting out his hand. "Yes, You're Starbuck," answered Selwood laconically as he gave him his own hand. "Can I have a word with you?" asked Starbuck. For answer Selwood, proffering a cigar from his waistcoat pocket, led the way to his table in the corner and pointed to a chair. Both men sat down. Starbuck spoke.

"I don't like to see a quarrel get going in the street, Selwood," he began, with an air of good-fellowship. "Dave Tracy and I didn't always agree. Tracy was getting pretty well along in years and he was a little cranky once in while—I guess maybe I was, too."

Starbuck smiled faintly with the candid admission. Selwood's face was receptively non-committal. "But Tracy," continued Starbuck, "had enemies where he might have had friends, which is a foolish policy, in my opinion, for any man." There was no cover hinting in Starbuck's manner—just frank disinterestedness. "Now Bartoe," he went on quietly, "has turned up a little grievance against you. I told him I didn't think there was anything serious to it—nothing but what could be ironed out between man and man—so I said I'd just come and have a little talk with you."

MALPEQUE

The Princetown post Master, Mr. A. Simpson Crozier, was suddenly stricken with a serious illness on Monday morning. Although not well the previous day, he was in readiness to drive from his home in Darnley to his duties as postmaster at the regular hour. Latest reports as to his health are much more encouraging than was at first anticipated.

Mr. Robert Harding while fishing lobsters on Tuesday afternoon was tossed out of his dory by an incoming wave. Messrs Harry Tuplin and Percy Hickey, who happened to be on the shore rowed to the scene of the accident and rescued the sinking man. Mr. Harding was taken to his home; medical summoned and he is now slowly recovering from what was nearly a drowning fatality.

NATIVE BORN JAPS SHORTER

TOKIO, May 9.—(U.P.)—Japanese children born in Hawaii and the United States are taller and stronger than those born in Japan, Dr. F. Ishihara, of the Medical School of Tokio Imperial University said on return from an American tour. The physician blamed the Japanese custom of squatting on floors instead of sitting in chairs as partly responsible.

The reason you see so few bird-houses on lawns now is that the rest of them are being used as telephone booths.
