SELWOOD of SLEEPY CAT by FRANK H. SPEARMAN

COPYRIGHT by CHARLES SCRIBNERS SONS. W.N.U. SERVICE

At the sound of a voice both looked up surprised. Laconic greetings exchanged, the older of the two men waded across the sandy bottom at Selwood's suggestion to speak to him. While he discussed with Selwood the awkward predicament in which he was caught, Selwood looked him closely over. He was a man of forty-five or fifty years; Selwood saw his longish thin hair streaked with gray, as was his still thinner beard—trimmed, apparently, for side-whiskers, but neglected during the exigencies of travel. His face was very thin, and this accentuated his features. His eyes were large, dark, and hollow; naturally bright, they were unnaturally so now in his excitement. His mouth was rather large, and his teeth, seeming thin also and spread rather wide apart, showed prominently when he smiled, as he was doing now—talking rapidly and apologetically to Selwood, who had already got down from the buckboard and was looking not very hopefully, as he listened, toward the wagon in the treacherous ford.

"You'd have saved time by going half a mile higher up," commented Selwood after he had heard the story. "All the freighting outfits go there for the rock bottom. This is all right when it's dry enough. It's a mean place after a shower. And if you don't get that lead team out of that sand pretty quick, you're liable not to get them out at all."
"What should you do, stranger?"
"The settler, apparently realizing that the buckboard man knew more than he knew about the situation.

For answer, Selwood spoke sharply to the teamster, an overgrown boy, who was geeing and having the pole team with the sole effect of setting the fore wheels of the wagon deeper into the sand. "Drop your lines where you are," cried Selwood, "and get that lead team ashore. Don't you see the near horse is going down?"

Perceiving the awkwardness and stupidity of the young fellow, Selwood, not waiting to see his order executed, walked into the creek and, followed by the settler, splashed across to where, struggling to free their feet, the head horses were floundering. Hastening to their heels, Selwood unhooked the single-tree, threw them over the backs of the frightened horses, and slapping them by turns smartly on the haunches, got them, splashing and struggling, ashore. Then bidding the teamster follow he recrossed the creek, turned up the seat of his buckboard, took out, hand over hand, a length of heavy chain, passed it to the teamster to carry over, and unhooking his own team, walked behind them, doubletree in one hand and reins in the other, across the creek. It was the work of but few minutes to fasten on end of the chain to the tongue of the stalled wagon and give directions to the two men as to where to stand and what to do. The settler was put with the team still hitched to the wagon. From the end of the wagon tongue the chain drawn taut reached ashore, where, on the sandy approach to the ford, Selwood had hooked his own team into the chain and, passing it between them, had hooked the rescued team to the chain's end.

With everything ready, Selwood gave final instructions. "Now if your king-bolt holds," he said, "we'll yank that wagon out; if it gives, you'll have to wait till you can rig another—there's a freighting outfit coming along about two hours before."

This is all right when its dry enough hind—now everybody—all together!" Selwood loosed a stentorian yell; the six horses, galvanized by the shock, bent to the job. The boy lashed with his lines and the settler shouted. The mired wagon creaked violently, groaned, and with the wheels ploughing through the gripping sand moved uncertainly. A fresh roar from Selwood signalized the success and spurred the horses to renewed efforts; and the partly released wagon, plunging ahead, was jerked and rattled ungraciously through the sullen quicksand and up the ford approach to dry land.

The emigrant turned to his rescuer with a joyful breath of relief. "Stranger," he exclaimed, "that's a big lift! My name's Flyer—what's yours?" he asked, holding out his hand.

His benefactor was taciturn. He took the extended hand, but without enthusiasm. "That's not the first time I've helped pull a wagon out of that hole," he said good-naturedly. "It probably won't be the last. I had to be pulled out of there once, myself; nobody uses this ford that knows it. Where you headed for?"
"Sleepy Cat. Where you bound?"
"Looks as if the whole United States is heading for Sleepy Cat."

Quebec Lady is Very Enthusiastic About Dodd's Kidney Pills

Mrs. S. Gibson Suffered with Kidney Trouble and Found Relief

Sutton, Quebec, May 5.—(Special)—Last winter I suffered with my kidneys and backache, writes Mrs. Sherman Gibson, R. R. No. 3, this place. "I told my husband I was going to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. After I had taken two boxes I found they were a great help to me. I can now do my work without suffering. I would not be without them in the house. I always recommend them highly to any of my friends that are troubled with their kidneys or backache."
Other sufferers of Backache tell of pains relieved and health restored through the use of Dodd's Kidney Pills. They act directly on the kidneys, they strengthen the kidneys and put them in shape to strain the uric acid out of the blood. They do one thing only, but they do that one thing well.

Give me a hand with that buckboard, boy, and I'll be moving." The three men pulled the buckboard across the creek without difficulty, helped Selwood to hitch his team and put back his chain. Selwood explained in answer to pointed questions that he was in the freighting business and looked after the Russell and Wentworth outfits through the mountains. Flyer, in turn, said he was taking some merchandise out to open a store in Sleepy Cat.

Selwood, answering laconically a rapid flow of questions, was glad to be ready to drive on. He gathered his reins to step into the buckboard. As he lifted his foot, with one hand on the dash and the other on the seat, to do so, his eyes fell on Flyer's first wagon, standing twenty yards away. The canvas opening at the hind end was parted and to his great surprise he saw that at the moment it framed the face of a girl of eighteen or twenty years. She did not see Selwood, and he stood motionless, staring at the unexpected sight.

She was bareheaded, with her hair parted in the middle and drawn plainly over her temples. On her neck a simple kerchief rested loosely above a simple dress. Women-folk were not uncommon in emigrant trains; indeed they were the rule. Yet Selwood paused as if petrified at the ordinary sight. Unluckily for him, his horses less interested in the situation, champed at their bits and tried to start. More even than the clear profile had promised was revealed in the full face; it was mere girlhood—simplicity and frank innocence—but it made Selwood catch his breath.

When her eyes fell on Selwood she looked rather quickly away and the parted canvas flap softly closed. Selwood stepped gingerly up into the buckboard and settled himself in his seat. The impatient horses leaped ahead. He did not attempt to look back.

Speaking Of Sports

Pitching Staff Not Sure Means of Victory

Pitching most managers will tell you is responsible for 60 to 70 per cent of a team's success. Maybe so, but let us consider the case of the Boston Red Sox.

Now, the Red Sox have finished last in the American league for years, and would seem to be headed for the cellar again in 1931. Yet the Red Sox, with the possible exception of the Washington Senators and the St. Louis Cardinals, have the strongest pitching staff in baseball.

Last year the club's regular working four was Milton Gaston, Danny MacFadyen, Horace Lisenbee and Jack Russell, truly a formidable quartet. This year the mound crop is even stronger. Ed Morris, who won 19 games for the tail-enders in 1928 and 14 in 1929, has recovered from his arm ailment and is fit for duty. Wilsey Moore, one-time New York Yankee star relief hurler, and Jim Brillheart, one-time Washington Senators star, have been added to the staff. Both Moore and Brillheart went great in the American Association last year.

With all this strength the Red Sox seemed doomed to the cellar. The Sox dropped three out of four of their opening series with the Yankees, despite the fact that Manager Shano Collins used practically his whole staff against the Ruppert Rifles. The men all pitched well but were given little or no support at the plate by their mates. In 1930 the Red Sox hit but 264, exactly 45 points lower than the Yankees. The Yankees scored, 1,062, runs, against 612 for the Red Sox.

Judging by the performance of the Red Sox pitching is less important than power at the plate. One has to turn only to the Phillies, however, to find support for the argument that pitching plays a tremendous part. The Phillies last year finished second to the Giants in club batting but finished way down deep in the National league cellar. In 1929 they topped the league in club batting with an average of 309 but could finish no better than fifth.
