Flower in the crannied wall, pluck you out of the crannies, hold you here, root and all, in my hand, Little flower—but if I could understand What you are, root and all, and all in all, I should know what God and man is.

HEALTH SAVERS

Many diseases are preventable. Point out health authorities of the department of national health and welfare, in reminding parents of protection available against common childhood diseases. Vaccination and inoculation are two weapons with which an infant may be armed against infection. The department urges that all parents consult their family doctor about these measures.

Housecleaning Hint When a nail works loose and falls out of a wall, don't drive it in somewhere else, leaving a hole. Instead, saturate a piece of cotton batting in glue and wrap it around the nail, then ease the nail back into the original hole, pressing it home hard. Wipe the excess glue away, and when dry the nail will be as firm as a rock.

DON'T OVERDO ACCESSORIES

NEW YORK — Never underestimate the effectiveness of accessories—good or bad. A Fifth Avenue shop recently devoted its entire group of windows to a display of the fur. The magnificence and importance of the fur, however, was lost on the beholder, fading before the brilliance and eye-riveting glamor of few insignificant jewel-toned satin gloves and turbans worn by the mannequins.

Instead of creating a drama through emphasizing the idea of the beauty and luxury of the fur, as was certainly intended, the costume interest was split, and the tawdry accessories ran away with the show.

This happens too often when we accessorize a costume. So despite the lure of the highlights of the costume, don't let them carry you away. Autumn ushers in many attractive lines, but with labor and leather, and many particular kinds of fabrics and frames still difficult to obtain, the accessory field is more returned to normal. This means we won't be indulging in too many breathtaking novelties this season, but will keep on a more even keel.

A FISH-SHAPED CHURCH

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (R.N.S.)—The St. Francis Xavier R. C. congregation here is planning erection of an ultra-modern church and rectory, unique in its fish-shaped architecture. The pastor explained that the fish is one of the oldest liturgical symbols of Christianity, originating in the Greek word "ichthys" meaning fish, the letters of which word provided the initial letters of the words in the phrase, "Jesus the Christ of God, the Saviour." The church will include a mothers' room—a glass-enclosed and sound-proofed room seen so that the altar can be seen. Mothers will be able to attend Mass in the novel room, yet the crying of their babies will not disturb the congregation.

GOOD EATING

We must all continue to consume fish which are still on the short side of the ledger. In preparing a liver and bacon dinner tonight, broil the liver and save every drop of bacon fat that's left in the frying pan for future use. With the liver and bacon, serve scalloped potatoes and baked onions in tomato sauce. Incidentally, you might use some left-over fat when you're making the scal-

DOROTHY DIX SAYS—

Mechanics For Daughter

Girl Should Be Encouraged To Learn More of Men's Specialties

DEAR MISS DIX: My daughter is 19 and has a very fine education, but she insists upon doing a man's job, instead of being a secretary, or school teacher, or something like that. The fact is that she has a strong mechanical talent and can fix anything about the house or the car that goes wrong, but I am disappointed because she will not take up some kind of work that will be helpful to her in the future.

She wants me to allow her to go to a school where she can get a fine mechanical training. Do you think I should let her go? And where should I send her?

PUZZLED MOTHER.

ANSWER: When children show a definite ability in any line, their parents make a terrible mistake when they do not let them follow their bent. It is like putting out the fire on an altar when you do not let them do the things that Nature intended them to do and in which they would be happy and successful. Most of the failures in the world are the men and women who were square pegs that their misguided families tried to force into round holes, where they never could be made to fit.

NO SEX IN TALENTS

Surely the war must have shown you that there is no sex in brains and talents, nor any women's work or men's work. The job belongs to the one who can best do it, whether male or female. Thousands of the most skillful and highly-paid workers in all of the war plants have been women, and in many jobs they have been even more efficient than men by reason of their smaller hands and more nimble fingers. No knowledge or skill is ever wasted, so you needn't worry about your daughter's mechanical training being of no value in case she should marry. I can't think of anything that would be a detriment about the house than a wife who could put in a new fuse when the old one burned out, or fix a leak in the bathroom, or drive a nail without smashing a hole in the wall. And if she could change tires on the car, oh boy what a treasure!

So give your daughter the mechanical training that she wants. She will be one of the pioneers of her sex, for there is no doubt that in this coming generation women electricians and architects and carpenters will be just as common as are women doctors and dentists. Thank heaven, there are good trade schools in every city now.

Ink Stain Remedies

Printing ink stains may be removed by rubbing thoroughly with lard, and then washing with soap and warm water. For writing inks, try washing with soap and water first. Then try cornmeal or salt or French chalk or talcum powder, brushing off as the ink is absorbed and repeating. If this is not successful, soak the stains in milk for one or two days, changing the milk as it becomes discolored. Or, rub the stains with a cut lemon, squeezing on some of the juice and rinsing frequently.

Bone Handles

The bone handles of knives, forks and such utensils can be cleaned by using a paste made of lemon juice and whiting.

Oak Furniture

Try applying hot linseed oil with a flannel cloth to bring back the luster on oak furniture.

Modern Etiquette

By Roberta Lee

Q. Is it proper, when writing a four-page letter, to write on the first page, then the fourth, followed by the second and third?

A. No. Such irregular sequence is both confusing and silly. Suggesting a publisher would print a book in this manner. Would we ask to be confused and silly. Suggesting a publisher would print a book in this manner. Would we ask to be confused and silly.

Q. Are the water glasses filled after the guests are seated at the table, or before the meal is announced?

A. The glasses should be filled about two-thirds full a few minutes before calling the guests to the table.

Q. Are wedding announcements sent to those who are invited to the wedding?

A. No; announcements are sent only to those who are not invited to the wedding.

How Can I!

By Anne Ashley

Q. How can I mend a leak in the umbrella? A. First put a piece of mending tissue a little larger than the hole. Then cut a piece of silk or cambric a little larger than the piece of tissue. Place tissue over the hole or under side of cover. Then place the silk or cambric over the tissue, tucking the edge under the tissue. Place a wet cloth over all and press with a hot iron.

Q. How can I make a good silver polish? A. Mix equal parts of whiting, ammonia and alcohol. Apply with a flannel, allow it to dry, and then polish with tissue paper.

Q. How can I wash oil paint? A. Wash them with warm milk and water. Rub very gently. Then wash without rinsing.

Ellen's Diary

By an Island Farmer's Wife

I came to the granary, which to-night houses most of our seed grain—in sheaf—when the last load for the day had been hauled. I went there because James wished that I would "hold light" for those who worked at the stowing. The sheaves from away from the road in a door in a gable of the building, which is approximately level with the top of what James terms "a fair-sized door." When I came there this evening the building was already full to the door-sill and the last load had been set in place. I slowly mounted a ladder to hold securely against the load, picked my steps across it and then with a mighty effort sprang across the narrow way to the door-sill. I held the ladder against the load, and as I stepped down between the two Rob must have seen me, for he said, "You're safe, Ellen! You're safe!" I transmitted mine to him when he was lending me a firm hand from the topmost round of the ladder. He continued to laugh. "Ha, ha," he said "seems to me that I've heard that yarn before!" However, I managed to leap the yawning chasm safely and at once sank comfortably on the dry sweet-smelling sheaves.

James had not set up in his appearance with the lantern and we lazily awaited his arrival. It was a shadowy place I had come to, so dimly lit by the fading light of the day that I could not make out the small deserted swallows' nests which clung to the cobwebby rafters. It was however, a fragrant, sweet-smelling place. Every fret and care of our workaday world. An orchestra of crickets played for me alone, so nicely that I thought I knew the music of the night musicians in Spring. But these piped a Summer gone by, while the others tune was rich with the perfume of the night. Out of doors, day was dying. The golden tints, which had been the aftermath of a glorious sunset, were fading into the blue above the neighboring woodlands. A star just above marked the place. The tips of the spruces lay dark against the horizon and a twilight soft and mellow was flooding the distant countryside. I suppose I might have forgotten my object in coming there and sat on into the night, but for the noise. Even then there was a brightness where presently clouds would be parted, but the team now and then stamped. The creak of the wagon and the moving of harness, Rob leaned on his fork a-top the load; Jack had his hand on the handle of the wheel and now in a small circle of lantern-light James appeared around a corner of the building. He was, as usual, in his nightgown. "Perhaps, Ellen," James called up to me, at the same time measuring the distance between us with his eyes. "No," came the reply. "Now listen, son," she remonstrated, "you wouldn't go to a dance without taking a bath, would you?" "Sure I would, Mom," came the reply. "It's not formal."

Morning Smile

A mother noticed that her high school son, who was getting ready to go to a dance, got dressed in record time.

"Boy, did you take a bath?" she asked him, accusingly. "No," came the reply. "Now listen, son," she remonstrated, "you wouldn't go to a dance without taking a bath, would you?" "Sure I would, Mom," came the reply. "It's not formal."
