The Yellow Stub

CHAPTER XLV

The next morning there was a night letter for Jimmy from Detective Mooney. He was still in New York it said, and he had found Marie Rellane.

She was living in an apartment in New York alone, still unmarried, and wealthy.

But the amazing part, to Jimmy, was this: "Twenty years ago she ran into Thaddeus Rand, down in Mexico City. He was living there had changed his name to Thomas Rolfe. He came one night to hear her sing and recognized her. Asked her if she knew whereabouts of Henry Rand.

"She did, but she hated old Thaddeus and didn't tell him. She had never seen Henry Rand since she gave him the ring. Three years ago when she was making an appearance in Grafton, she never wrote to him again, not even to tell him about seeing Thaddeus." She hadn't read about your father's murder and was broken up when I told her. I think she realized that never did I'm writing you in full and we're looking up Thaddeus Rand in Mexico City.

"Well, can you beat that?" cried Barry. He looked at Jimmy in blank amazement.

"O'Day told me," said Jimmy, "that Thaddeus Rand had said something about not being worthy of the name of Rand any more. It's not surprising to learn that he has changed his name."

"He kept the same initials. Isn't it queer how people do that when they change their names?"

"Not so queer, when you realize how often they have clothing and jewelry and different things marked with their initials.

Jimmy shoved his hands in his pockets and strode over to the window, to gaze thoughtfully at the street below. "I wonder if old Thaddeus Rand is still alive. Lord, Barry, this thing might be cleared up before we know it if we continue to make this progress. I tell you that fellow Mooney is a wonder. Imagine finding Marie Rellane, or rather Marie Rollane, as she's called now, so soon!"

"All I hope is that we're not following a blind trail to be running down Marie Rellane and Thaddeus Rand."

"Something tells me we're not. Barry. Something tells me the fellow is going to lead me out from Mexico City to Montreal. When we find out what's happened in the years that Thaddeus Rand has been in Mexico, we're going to be at the root of all this mystery."

"What gets me," Jimmy said later that day as they were eating lunch, "is why Marie Rellane should refuse to tell Thaddeus Rand about my father."

"I think I can understand it," Barry said. "If she really loved Henry Rand as much as Mooney seems to think she did, she certainly wouldn't have much use for the man who broke up the affair—even if at the time it was nothing but a school kid romance."

"But if she thought so much of my father, why shouldn't she think of his happiness? Wouldn't she realize that he would like to know where his own father was?"

"Not necessarily. Like most of the other people in their little town, she probably figured that Thaddeus Rand had killed any affection Henry Rand might have for him. She's one of the type herself, you know, that harbours a grudge for a long, long time. All she could see was old Thaddeus eating his heart out—if he could possibly relent that much—for his son. And why should she, with so much to hate him for, try to make him happy?"

"Oh, well, it takes all sorts to make a world, I suppose. But if she had only told my father, things might have turned out differently. All this—with a vague wave of his hand—"needn't have happened."

He sighed. "If Thaddeus Rand—my grandfather is dead, he must have died very unhappy."

Barry stood and signaled for the waiter. "I've got another confab on this afternoon. About the damage suit, I suppose I'll have another interview with your friend Sam Church."

He grinned. "Shall I give him your regards?"

"Yes," Jimmy said grimly. "With a piece of lead pipe."

"By the way, Jim," and Barry tried to appear casual, "have you heard anything lately from Mary Lowell?"

"Why no," Jimmy looked at him keenly. "What makes you ask?"

"Oh, nothing in particular," Barry shifted the subject. "I wish you'd take me up on my proposition of staking you a little money."

Jimmy said: "She never wrote to me, Barry. I'll swear it. God! If I'd only known—"

They walked along briskly. Days later, when Jimmy had time to reflect, he wondered that Mary Lowell should have appeared just as they were talking about her.

It was Barry who first attracted attention to her. "Speaking of angels," he sighed, "here she is now."

And then Jimmy saw her. The light of recognition was in her eyes. Words formed on her lips. And just about as he was about to lift his hat to greet her he espied a familiar figure about to board a street car.

He wheeled suddenly and ran like a mad man, leaving a surprise-stricken Mary Lowell and an equally flabbergasted Barry Colvin.

until you get on your feet again. "Nothing doing, Barry."

"Well, let me be your financial manager, then."

Jimmy laughed. "I'll agree to permit you to keep me from starving, old socks. When I'm up a-gallop, I'll call on you."

Knowing that Lieutenant O'Day's rising hour was somewhat about noon, Jimmy hastened to call him by telephone and apprise him of the news from Mooney.

"Fine!" said O'Day. "He's a smart lad, that Mooney. Tell him if he ever needs a job there's a place waiting for him in the detective bureau here."

With Barry, O'Day agreed that it was not so strange—Marie Rellane's refusal to disclose to Thaddeus Rand the whereabouts of his son.

"If you ask me, Rand, I think the old boy had it coming to him. Punishment, you know. . . . And I think we're coming along fine now. Somethin' tells me we're goin' to get at the bottom of this before very long."

"I know I'm going to win my case, Jim," Barry said when, fresh from his conference, he met Jimmy Rand again. "I think they see I've got them licked. This fellow Church made me another proposition today and it was just twice as good as the first one he gave me."

"You're getting pretty cocky, young man, aren't you? You know what they say about this man Church. He doesn't know when he's licked."

"I'm not afraid of him as a matter of fact he's a good deal worried."

Did you see Mary Lowell, Barry?"

Barry paused to light a cigarette. From behind his cupped hands he watched Jimmy narrowly as he spoke from lips that were clamped tight on the cigarette end. "Yes, I saw her. She asked about you."

"Asked about me? No, Barry—oh, don't kid me about it."

"I'm not kidding, I say she asked about you—and she seemed greatly interested, too—a good deal more than you deserve. You're just a stubborn block head."

"Wait a minute," Jimmy grabbed the other's arm and stopped him short. "Stay right where you are. Now what the devil are you driving at?"

"Oh, I'll put you out of your misery. She doesn't love Sam Church. No more than you do."

"And yet," Jimmy said bitterly, "she's going to marry him."

"I'm not kidding, I say she's not going to marry him. She broke off with him some time ago."

"Barry, if you're lying I'll—"

"Yes, I know you would, Cocky. But I'm not lying I'll swear it on a stack of Bibles as high as the Woolworth building."

"Listen," he laid a hand on Jimmy's shoulder. "Do you remember my saying to you some time ago to mark down the date in your note book? You remember?"

"I told you some day you'd appreciate me for the great benefactor to mankind that I was."

"Yes, I remember. What's it got to do with what you're telling me?"

"Just this. I told Mary Lowell your story. I explained to her who Olga Maynard was. Now wait a minute let me finish. I realized I was butting in and all that sort of thing, but you're such a darn fool, Jim."

"And what did she say?" He waited, breathless, for Barry's reply.

"She was really glad to know it, she had the notion, Jim, that you were in love with Olga Maynard."

"But Church—"

"I just learned to-day that she had broken off with Church, and it was before I told her about you. So, Jim, she's crazy about you. But you're such a pig-headed fool. She wondered why she hadn't heard from you."

"Why she hasn't heard from me! Why, I didn't know all this about her and Church."

"She said she wrote to you and you never answered. Barry seized Jimmy's sleeve. "Come, let's move along. We'll be pinched for blocking the sidewalk."

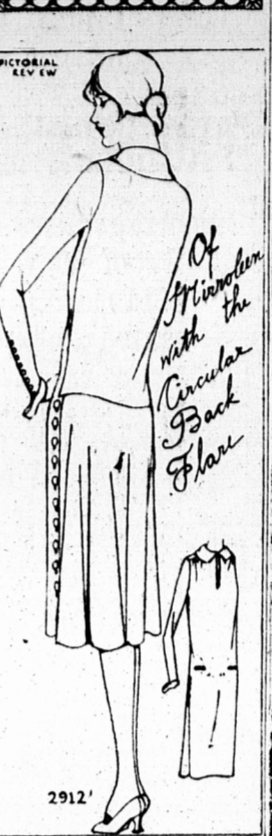

Jimmy said: "She never wrote to me, Barry. I'll swear it. God! If I'd only known—"

They walked along briskly. Days later, when Jimmy had time to reflect, he wondered that Mary Lowell should have appeared just as they were talking about her.

It was Barry who first attracted attention to her. "Speaking of angels," he sighed, "here she is now."

And then Jimmy saw her. The light of recognition was in her eyes. Words formed on her lips. And just about as he was about to lift his hat to greet her he espied a familiar figure about to board a street car.
