"When friends ask me what I do to make my hair so soft and gleamy," says Miss Hargrave, "I have to think twice to tell them, because I give so little time to it. The method I use is very popular among New York girls."

Men Marooned

By George Marsh

THE STORY

So poignant was the memory that the man, stretched on his blankets in the dim candle light instinctively raised his right hand to trace with his fingers the course of the bullet which had seared his face.

"Etienne is surely making a wet night of it in the bush, Shot," said the man, as the wind drove the rain in bursts against the straining fly of the tent. Then with the hairy bulk of the contented dog sprawled against the length of his recumbent body, heal propped on one hand while the other rubbed the airdale's ears, Guthrie's thoughts were again with his home-coming, two years before. "The tense days following his landing marched past his dreaming eyes in a pageant of camp life and military duties preceding the discharge of his battery; swift hours with Ethel, dinners with his family, reunions with old friends. Again he rode through cheering thousands in the final review of his brigade.

He chuckled at the memory of Shon marching with battalion headquarters in full field kit and wearing a blanket with its wound stripe.

At the time of his discharge the surgeons had shaken their heads over his lungs. "You're not out of the woods, yet," he had been told. "A long rest in the open air, or you'll have trouble with that chest." But a desk in the office of Charles Guthrie waited him and he had kept his own counsel.

"You've lost five years, old man his materialist brother had deprecated. "You're twenty-six and have a lot to learn."

Hot blood had darkened Garth's face. "Lost five years? Where would you and your money be if millions of us hadn't lost five years?" he blurted.

"Oh, you know I appreciate all that, old chap," soothed the smug Charles. "It's necessary for me to repeat how proud I am of your record, but you know nothing about the business as yet; and I want to see you in a position to marry."

True Garth had acknowledged, he knew nothing of the Guthrie Steel company, which, created and developed by the energy and ability of Charles Guthrie, had, through war contracts, made his brother a millionaire. And then there was Ethel, waiting. So, instead of the summer in the open air on which the doctors had insisted, he had gone to work.

The fingers of the man lying in the tent shut, convulsively on the thick mane of his dog as he remembered the pain which thrust through him when he had first realized that Ethel never voluntarily walked or sat on his right side. Coming from a world of broken men, where the blind and the maimed were commonplace, he had almost forgotten the shock the scar on his cheek had given her the day of his homecoming. Unpleasant thought it might be, this red gash, to look upon, it was nevertheless the symbol of his service, the measure of his manhood. Yet to the girl who loved him, it seemed a thing of aversion—repulsive. Following the discovery, he had, on meeting her ironically covered the cleat with his hand, or turned his head, but the red shame and the passionate tears of protest, which it invariably induced, checked him.

That Ethel Falconer was not of the fiber of many of the women he knew, who patently cherished the scars of their men-gloried, seemingly, in these proofs of their sacrifice for Canada, and the empire, had forced itself upon the consciousness of Guthrie with a bitterness with which his philosophy vainly contended. Vehement as were her protests, her denials, when, in a moment of depression and disillusion he had suggested that to hold her to a promise made in 1916 to a man whose face was presentable and body sound, was grossly unfair, now that he had returned to her the flossam of war, scarred changed he nevertheless knew that Ethel, too, was having her bad half hours. But notwithstanding his moment of doubt, his gray moods, rue as much to physical conditions as unhappiness, Garth Guthrie had valiantly clung to the dreams of the fair girl he had taken back overseas with him after the golden fortnight in 1916.

Then, after six months in the office and foundry of Charles Guthrie, the lungs of the returned soldier had developed a condition which medical authorities diagnosed as alarming. A certain sanatorium in the foothills of the Laurentians was the imperative order, and the wedding in the spring, for which Ethel and Clara Guthrie had so meticulously planned, was indefinitely postponed.

With this dog, trained as a puppy behind the lines in 1918, Guthrie left Montreal to make the fight for lost health—and happiness. And before the snows left the Quebec hills and the spruces dripped in April thaws, he was well on the road to the first. Six months in the Laurentians had healed the lung lesions and put back the hard weight he had lost, but it was under strict parole that the Garth Guthrie of old, burned to a deep tan by the sun-glare from the Marcon crust, one day walked in on Ethel and his sister-in-law. That night at dinner, through the course of which the practical Charles dwelt at length on his plans for his brother's apprenticeship in a special branch of the growing business, the sober eyes of Garth lit with frank amusement—the hint of a smile repeatedly lifted the corners of his mouth. At length the older brother abruptly demanded: "You don't seem to be taking me seriously, Garth?"

Shipping Merger

(Special to The Guardian) NEW YORK, Feb. 2.—Formation of one of the world's largest shipping companies through consolidation of three American lines was regarded in shipping circles today as a possibility of the near future. The three lines concerned were the United States Lines, the American Merchant Lines and the Munson fleet. Consolidation of the concerns if accomplished would give the United States a shipping organization that could compete with the greatest of the world's lines since they would be capable of carrying on a more balanced trade than under separate operation.

In Memoriam

JOHN A. MCKINNON There passed peacefully away at his home at Selkirk, on December 28th, a highly respected resident, in the person of Mr. John A. McKinnon, at the age of 88 years. Deceased was a highly respected man. In his early years he followed the sea. He was a noted sailor and fisherman before he started railroading, being one of the pioneers in that business, having joined the force at the opening of the Island railway in 1876, and continued an employee until age necessitated his withdrawal.

There was no pension in his day, so he turned his attention to farming and made it a success. Besides farming he carried His Majesty's mail from Selkirk Station for a good many years, even up to last July.

He suffered three months illness from cancer, it being the third attack. In the previous two cases he had the cancer removed, but in this last attack he considered himself too old to undergo an operation.

He was visited frequently by his pastor, Rev. Louis P. Callaghan, also his friends also called to see him regularly. Besides his brother and sister, he leaves to mourn his loving wife and four daughters, Mrs. Deagle, Boston; Mrs. McPhee, Boston; Mrs. McInnis, Selkirk; Annie at home, and four sons, Allan, Selkirk; James, of the C. N. R.; William at home, and also Joseph at home.

The high esteem in which the late Mr. McKinnon was held, was shown by the large funeral cortege which accompanied the remains to the Church at St. Charles, on the morning of December 28th. The hearse was driven by Mr. James E. McInnis, and the pallbearers were: Eleston McPhee, Wilfred McPhee, A. J. McDonald, Daniel E. McDonald, Peter J. McDonald and James Carter.

A high mass of requiem was celebrated by Rev. Louis P. Callaghan, after which the mortal remains were tenderly laid away in the nearby churchyard, there to await the day of glorious resurrection promised to the just. May his soul rest in peace.

JAMES GILBERT

In Souris, Jan. 29, James Gilbert passed away at the age of 77. For four years he had been an invalid, practically helpless and a great sufferer, but he bore his sufferings with wonderful fortitude. An attack of flu proved fatal.

His widow and son are left at home. He is also survived by brothers in Nova Scotia. He was buried in the C. of E. Cemetery on Jan. 31st. Rev. A. D. MacDonald conducting the service.

ELIZABETH RICHARDS

At Souris, on Jan. 19th, there took place the death of Elizabeth, the seven-year daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Norman Richards. She had been suffering from diabetes for some time, and an attack of flu proved too much for her reduced condition.

She leaves to mourn, besides her parents, an older brother Claude and two younger sisters, Pauline and Muriel. She is greatly missed at home and among her playmates.

The funeral service, conducted by Rev. A. D. MacDonald, took place on the 21st.

JOHN HENRY MCKIE

At Bay Fortune, on Jan. the 20th., J. Henry McKie died at the advanced age of 82. After an attack of the flu, from which he had recovered, he suffered a paralytic stroke which proved fatal. Mr. McKie was a highly respected citizen, well liked by all who knew him, as he was of a quiet, friendly disposition. He was a valued member of Bay Fortune United Church, and a regular worshipper there when he was able. His wife, who was a Miss Sanderson of St. Peter's Bay, predeceased him by 47 years, leaving two very

Canadian Government Endorses Application

(Special to The Guardian) seeking to obtain this important sporting event for Canada. Sir George McLaren Brown, Canadian representative on the international olympic committee has been in communication by cable with members of that committee and the United States olympic committee in reference to the matter. President McKinnon, of the Canadian committee will be in New York next week at the Milrose games and will confer with the United States olympic officials and endeavor to enlist their support on behalf of Canada. There is still more doubt as to whether the United States has been awarded the winter sports as well as the summer games but even if such is the case an effort will be made to have the winter sports in Canada in 1932. The intention is to hold the sports in Montreal or Ottawa if they are awarded to Canada.

TORONTO, Feb. 2.—Endorsation by the Canadian government of the application of the Canadian Olympic committee for the Olympic winter sports of 1932 has been received by President P. J. Mulqueen. A letter today from the prime minister, Hon. W. L. MacKenzie King, reads as follows: "Let me say that I think a large measure of good may well accrue to Canada, whose representatives have established an enviable record in the olympic games by holding the winter sports in this country. Games carry a distinct appeal to all classes of the community and are recognized as one of the most effective agencies of publicity. I am pleased, therefore, personally and on behalf of my colleagues in the government to commend the enterprise of the Canadian olympic committee in SNARING MOOSE St. JOHN N. B. February 4.—How the simple method used to snare rabbits is employed in the thrilling sport of capturing moose alive was explained to visitors at the New England Sportsmen's show by Claude F. Bishop, New Brunswick guide. Among all the forest denizens appearing in the flesh at the sportsmen's show, none excited more interest or curiosity than the cow moose caught by Bishop and freighted to Boston in a box car.

The method of capture, Bishop explained to the numerous outdoor men who piled him with questions, is quite simple. A noose of strong manila rope is hung across the moose trail and obscured with boughs. When the animal puts his head through, the pressure of the rope against his body causes him to plunge forward and the snare tightens. A birch log is tied at the end of the rope to impede progress and the moose then easily overtaken. The animal exhibited at the show was one of sixteen caught in this manner by Bishop and his brother in Albert County, New Brunswick. Only one bull was snared.

Five American airplanes were sent to Brazil this year. Scotland has a woman of the hounds in Mrs. Jack Cosmo, mother of a baby.
