BRITAIN AND U. S.

exist today in the world markets. America's banking system is such that hundreds of banks may crash in a single year. Britain's stock exchange business is conducted on sound lines; she has her Hatrys, but deals with them swiftly and surely. America's stock exchange shows the remarkable phenomenon of eight thousand million pounds being lost in three weeks.

Britain has more employed labor today than before the war. America has probably more unemployed today in proportion to her population than any other country in the world.

The American states repudiate their debts, and the Federal Government collects their share and refuses to intervene to see that foreign bondholders are paid these repudiated debts.

Britain is organizing with the help of the dominions and colonies the British Empire into an economic unit; this empire is now the most powerful force in the world, and when properly organized will be the greatest factor in the life of the world. America is approaching the end of her natural resources and will, in the comparatively near future, be faced with world competition on an equal basis. Britain's sea power, naval and mercantile, is not declining; America's sea power depends on subsidies. Britain has unlimited reserves of men with a "sea sense," and is still building half of the ships produced by the world annually. America is hardly able to man her present naval and mercantile fleets. Britain is proceeding to a sane development of the empire. Her industrial technique is in part antiquated, but this is being rapidly remedied.

Finally the United States of America is incurring the distrust and dislike of the nations of the world, and is heading, in the opinion of many, for a financial and commercial disaster.

IRISH CLAIM FIRST SMOKERS

That smoking was enjoyed in Ireland centuries before Sir Walter Raleigh plundered Spanish galleons and spread seed for disputes about coals, carloads and candy, is the claim of Irish students of relics and art. They show that pipes of bronze and clay have been unearthed in very ancient Irish burial places, and in Kildare a blonde's primitive pipe was found between the teeth of a human skull more than 1,000 years old. A monument in Corcumore Abbey, County Clare, erected to the King of Thomond, who was killed in battle seven centuries ago, shows the king lying down with a short pipe, or "dudeen" of the Irish, in his mouth. In days before the coming of tobacco, dried herbs were smoked.

DANCER TELLS OF 'A CANADIAN BANI'

CAPETO WN, South Africa, Sept. 4.—(By The Canadian Press)—"The Cape Angus under the heading 'In a Canadian Bani' gives prominence to the story of a South African dancer 'on tour', Joyce Bolus.

Her "young cousins" in Moose Jaw, Sask., will be interested to know that they were considered to speak with a modified American accent, only because they were laughed at for attempting to use the King's English when amongst their school-fellows.

"As I'd come from such a far country as South Africa," she writes, "I was taken to see how things were done 'out West.' So we went to the village of Tuxford to a dance held in Oddfellows' Hall."

"The dance began at 9.30 p. m. Three girls wore evening dress, the rest anything they chose—costumes, jerseys and thick-pleated tweed skirts, silk and taffeta. And regardless of fashion, some frocks were long, some short, some narrow and some wide. Many wore hats of various descriptions, including berets, and shoes of everyday use, not too new either. A few wore the cute little American shoes with large bows. Their coiffures passed through all stages—shingle, Eton crop, bob, bob showing one ear, semi-long and long. "The men wore white shirts, sleeves rolled up, and dark trousers and no coats. Such a conglomeration! These—the people from the farms and the city."

"The band began to make a noise—you couldn't call it anything else—and couples took the floor, when, to my surprise, I saw the crudest type of Charleston and something that looked like the polka.

"Another evening we went to a dance in aid of an annual park for Moosejaw which was held in a 35,000 dollar barn. Whenever a new barn is built, a dance is held in it before it is put to proper use.

Young man: "Well, I prefer blondes."

STOCKMEN IN CONFERENCE—Believing that the high price of feeds was a handicap to the promotion of the various branches of the livestock industry in the Maritime Provinces, a meeting of a number of the livestock men working in these provinces was held at the Royal Hotel Tuesday evening to discuss the situation, says the Saint John Telegraph Journal. Dr. John M. Trueman, principal of the Nova Scotia Agricultural College, Truro, was elected chairman of the meeting and J. H. King, secretary. A general committee, headed by Dr. Trueman, was appointed to make a study of available feeds and to suggest rationings for the various classes of livestock that would be more economical than those generally fed. The committee was asked to make a report back at another general meeting to be held at the Amherst Winter Fair in November. Other members of this committee are W. H. McEwen, Moncton, Maritime representative of the Canadian Wheat Pool; A. E. MacLaurin, Fredericton, New Brunswick Livestock Superintendent; C. F.
