Steinbeck Describes Algiers As a War-Time Whirl of Color

Finds American Troops, French and Arab Nations Converse in Polyglot Language; Near Front, Yet They Hear Little News of the War

(Special to The N. Y. Herald-Tribune, Aug. 27, 1943, New York Tribune, Inc.)

ALGERS (Via London)—Algiers is a fantastic city now. A place of strange mixtures, it has been brought to a nightmarish mood by the influx of British and American troops.

The roads are lined with open wagons loaded high with fresh-picked grapes, with military convoys and American tanks.

Local Problems Upperoost—Soldiers here are not so much interested in the trend of war as the soldiers are in training camps at home.

Language Is a Mixture—The languages spoken in the streets are fascinating. Rarely is one whole conversation carried out in just one language.

SLIGHT ACCIDENT—Two cars, one from Quebec, the other from St. John's, collided yesterday evening on Elm Avenue about 5.30.

SYMPATHY EXTENDED—It was with deep regret that P. E. Island friends learned of the death at Petitediac on Thursday of Elizabeth, wife of Rev. A. Chapman, Mr. and Mrs. Chapman spent fourteen years on P.E.I.
