SUPREME COURT

Charlottetown, Saturday. Before His Honor Mr. Justice Fitzgerald. Daniel McDonald vs. The Island Cold Storage Co., Ltd.—An action to recover damages alleged to have been sustained through the defendant company's negligence.

THE CASE FOR THE DEFENCE.

Opening the case for the defence Mr. Stewart said that it would be proved on behalf of his clients that the temperature during the period of the killing of the lambs by the plaintiff varied between 51 and 32, as the minimum, and 29 and 14, as the maximum, above zero, and he would be able to establish that such a state of temperature would effect the soundness of the meat.

THE QUESTION OF DAMAGES.

Outside of that, proceeded Mr. Stewart, the question of damages did not amount to much. The point as to the removal of bandages had already been settled in the Court of Manitoba, and it was held that the bandages made little or no difference, that if the meat was frozen it did not matter whether there were bandages on it or not.
