"THE LOVE PENDULUM"

BY MARION RUBINCAM

THE MAN WINS

Chapter 22

Aunt Harriet could not but be mollified at this, the ordinary courtesy of the speech demanded that. But she got around it very cleverly, for she was really an extraordinary clever woman.

"Your mother has already been charming enough to offer me the hospitality of her home," she said, her tones only a shade warmer than they had been. "I am sorry I cannot accept it, except until the train leaves tomorrow."

"If you must go, you won't see Connie—and she has been looking forward to a visit all during her convalescence," Win said smoothly and sweetly.

I looked at him in admiration. Here was a side of him that I had not seen yet. The city men were masters on this suave manner, but I never thought to find it in Win, born and bred in the little village of Wellsville.

Naturally Aunt Harriet was furious Win had hit her weak spots—she knew she had neglected me while I was ill. But no one could have guessed that Win had scored a hit from her unrelenting exterior.

"I shall see Connie because Connie goes with me," she said.

"But Aunt Harriet, I'm married now! And I don't want to go—I don't have to go—Win dear?" I appealed to him suddenly.

He held out his hand and took one of mine in it.

"She's of age, you know, Mrs. Bennett," he said gently.

Of course he won the argument. Aunt Harriet had possibly never accepted defeat before, and she did it now with poor grace.

"Yes, she's of age, and if she wants to stay, I have no control over her. She's married, and that seems to be that—until she finds out the mistake she made. Fortunately, people are broad-minded about legal separations and div—"

"Aunt Harriet!" I interrupted.

"I beg your pardon," she returned. "You've been married two days. Wait until it's been two years, or ten. Then we'll see what happens. Meantime it seems I have to make the best of this."

"Will you shake hands then?" Win asked, holding out his right hand.

Aunt Harriet gazed serenely over his head and refused to see the hand.

"Since you suggested that we be frank," she said, "I intend to take advantage of your offer. I've had two days to sit here and await your return, and during that time I've seen something of the place, and its inhabitants, and I've learned a few things about you from your mother."

"You've learned nothing to my discredit then," Win answered, still smiling and keeping his temper.

"Naturally not." She left it an open question as to whether there was nothing to learn, or whether it would not be learned from his mother. "I've found out that you have a position in an oil company here, that you've never been discharged, that you've been a good son and the people here like you. You look much better than I expected. You're attractive and you have a quick tongue and a good temper, that, I've found for myself since I've seen you."

"I'm glad you like me a little," Win said. But this was premature—it gave her an opening.

"I don't, to be quite frank," she said. "You've married my niece, and I had my niece's future planned in an entirely different way. I can see how she would be attracted to your type. You'll probably make her a good husband, as the saying goes. But what will you offer her?

"Your mother says you have money, in her trust. So you'll be able to live very well. She says in the best house in the village. She says between your salary and the income due you from your estate, you'll be rich. We needn't mention sums, they are a detail. But here and rich in the city are two different things.

"Even if you are rich by our standards, what can you do with it here? What can you offer my niece? What is the finest house in a town like this? What are its people, its opportunities?

"Do you know what you've done? You've married a girl, heiress to a very large estate—"

"We have already agreed that she lives on my money, not hers," Win cut in. He was getting angry now, and I was afraid of a quarrel. I went behind him and slipped my hand into his.

"That sounds well. You may be able to do it—in Wellsville. You could not in New York, or any plac ethat counts. And the money is only part of it. You've gone off with the prettiest girl in New York—you have, I'm her aunt, and I know. With her beauty and my money, I could have made anything of her. She could have married anyone she chose—"

"I chose Win," I cried.

"Yes, you chose Win," she echoed. "And for a time it will be very fine. But you'll starve, mentally and spiritually in a place like this. You weren't born or bred to live in such a place. You may think so now. You're young and romantic, and you've been ill and you don't mind the quiet. But I've had the pleasure of meeting some of your friends here—your Ella and Margery and some whose names I've forgotten. I know you too well to think you'll be satisfied with them!"

"She won't have to be," Win cried suddenly. "I'm going to bring her to the city."

Aged Cabman's Story Of King Edward

(By Dominion News Service)

LONDON, July 10.— Some of the veteran London "cabbies," survivors of a bygone era, recently exchanged reminiscences of these halcyon days.

Twelve old pensioners of the Cab Drivers' Benevolent Association in Soho Square. Such of the pensioners as are able pay a monthly visit to the offices. They look forward to meeting comrades. There was nothing sad about the little gathering, and the men smiled at many of the merry memories recalled.

Black silk hats, a trifle interesting in shape, had been brought out and brushed for the occasion. These hats looked as if they had been made for a whip to be raised to, in the manner which London, is forgetting now.

The leader of the party seemed to be old Bob Faulkner, a sprightly "card" of 84. A little bent white-haired, and rather quavery as to speech, he tells an anecdote with spirit and point.

Tale of King Edward.

Most of the old men speak sooner or later of "Teddie", as they call the late King Edward. They regarded it as a point of honour not to recognize him when he hailed then in the street and responded with a non-committal "All right, gov'nor", when receiving directions.

Bob Faulkner seems to have picked up King Edward pretty frequently during a promenade in Pall Mall, St. James's Street, or Piccadilly. He tells a delicious anecdote of a cahman who took upon himself to wait for King Edward, the Prince of Wales, without being asked.

The Prince spent three hours with his friends, at the end of his visit hailed a cab which was crawling in the neighbourhood, and was driven a short distance. When he alighted he paid the man his fare, 1s. 6d., with a bit over for himself.

"Look here, gov'nor," said the driver, keeping up the polite fiction of non-recognition for his own ends, "do you know what you've give me? I've been waiting three hours for you."

"What do you want, then?" asked the Prince.

"Half a bar," replied the driver.

"Half a bar? What's that?" asked the Prince.

"Half a James," explained the driver.

"All right. I'd no idea you had been waiting for me," said the Prince as he handed the artful cabby half a sovereign.

Third Queens

To the Lady and Gentlemen voters of the Third Electoral District of Queens.

I am again in the field asking for your support in the coming election. You all know my record for the past four years in the interests of the farmers and taxpayers of the country. If elected the following will be some of the policies I will strive to have carried out: Cutting down the members salaries to $300.00, reducing the poll tax; paying the school teachers salaries from the Government treasury so as to give the smaller schools that cannot pay a high supplement an equal chance with the larger ones also a greater encouragement of School Fairs the establishing of demonstration fields; stopping Government importation of live stock as it is detrimental to private enterprise; the encouragement of flax growing which would save our farmers over $100,000.00 a year in oil cake also public highway contracts to be sold by the mile.

As it is impossible for me to see all the voters I would take this opportunity of thanking you for your past support and asking for a continuation of the same on the 26th. If elected I will support any policy that is for the benefit of the country regardless of party.

PETER BRODIE.

House is thoroughly repaired and painted, is completely equipped with good storm windows and fly screens, and has a spacious verandah on three sides.

Outbuildings consist of barn about 35x20 containing a garage 18x20 and stable room for three horses or cows, a hen house and an ice or wood house the latter of which is now filled with sufficient ice for the season. All are in good repair.

There are about four acres of exceptionally fertile land including a beautiful and well kept lawn and a large vegetable garden in a high and forward state of cultivation. Fruit trees consist of apple, plum and cherry. There is a strawberry and a blackberry patch.

In a word the above is a home for the discerning few who demand and know and appreciate what is best. Inspection is invited.
