"Tiz" For Tired Or Aching Feet

Just put those weary, shoe-cracked aching, burning feet into a Tiz bath.

Tiz is grand, glorious for tortured feet. It draws the swelling and poisonous exudations right out. Stops the pain of corns. Ends torture and puts your feet into perfect conditions.

Your shoes won't seem tight and your feet will never hurt or get sore and swollen. Think of it, no more foot misery—and you will wear smaller shoes. Get a box of Tiz at any drug store and get instant relief for a few cents.

Inhuman Crime Charged by Mother Of French Soldier

PARIS, July 5—A crime so dastardly and cowardly a nature as to be almost unbelievable is being alleged by the mother of a dead French soldier against the mayor and two councillors of the little village of Reully-Sauvigny, in the Department of the Aisne. It happened nearly seven years ago, and all the time the mother has persistently and against a hundred difficulties been seeking to discover how her son met his death, and how to obtain justice on those who she alleged killed him to save their own lives and property.

The drama happened in the first weeks of the war and to understand how it could have been possible, the terror of those days must be recalled when the Germans were pouring across Belgium and Eastern France, shooting and burning on every pretext, deliberately spreading panic, fear and working out in blood and fire their theory of how a war ought to be waged. Fear was above all the dominant emotion of those days. It spread from town to town and from village to village with every story and most of them were true—of how hostages had been shot here and houses burned there, because a French soldier had been found hidden or because some ancient firearms had been discovered.

News of such doings came every day to Reully-Sauvigny, which lay right in the path of the advancing army. On September 3 the last French companies in the great retreat from Charleroi passed through the village. They consisted of the Fourth Zouaves. Just as they reached the village one man the soldier, Louis Letermoller, fell out, overcome with heat and fatigue. On the wagons there was no room for even one more sick man, so hastily the officer sought out a house where the man could be sheltered. His uniform and identity papers and disc were taken away and he was left in a little wineshop kept by a widow, Madame Monnerat. For the almost unconscious man she did all that could be done. She had no fear of what might happen if the German came, but thought only of the sick man.

Not so, it is alleged, her kinsman, the mayor of the village. As soon as the troops had gone he arrived all enaged and in a panic of fear because the Zouave had been left behind. If the Germans found him, witnesses declare now that he cried, they would burn the village and shoot himself and others. At once he sought out—such is the story—two of his colleagues of village elders and to them explained that the Germans were only an hour away and that they would all be shot and their farms burned if it was found that they were harboring the Zouave. The other two, infected by his fears, lost their heads and, it is alleged, agreed to all his plans. At all costs they must get rid of the soldier.

At nightfall they went to the house where he was being nursed, and, carrying him between them, his mother declares, they threw him alive and sick into the River Marne, where, after a feeble struggle, he sank, crying for help to his assassins. Two witnesses, a young girl and an old woman, have come forward to declare they saw the crime committed, and others saw its sequel.

Contrary to what had been expected, the Germans did not arrive even the next day, and the villagers who had remained began to inquire what had become of the Zouave who had been left in their charge. Alarmed now that their crime would be discovered the mayor and his assistants, it is charged, went again at nightfall and dragged the body from the Marne and buried it.

What has become of the old-fashioned girl who was an expert at making coffee and her own dresses?
