The Old Order Changes

By DAVID LYALL

(Continued) 'What's this Bee says about stopping on at Mardocks, Mary? I hope you have not done anything so foolish as to suggest it after having actually resigned. Goodness knows, life is difficult enough at present, with you father's odd way of going on, without any complication from you. One would think he was going to a nice place like Gorham Lacy to live.'

Dr. Golding Lauds Sargon

'My troubles started in 1900 with chronic constipation that defied every effort I made for relief. My whole system became toxic. Rheumatism settled in my arms and legs; my digestion was impaired. I had constant headaches and dizzy attacks, and was finally forced to give up my practice. Knowing something of the scientific background of the Sargon formula, I tried the treatment. Sargon Pills re-established a regularity of bowel movements and overcame my toxic condition. The Sargon liquid restored my digestion and my strength returned. Every trouble I had disappeared and I expect to soon resume my practice. When I do, I will recommend this remarkable treatment.' Dr. H. Verner Golding, 12 Christie-Grant Block, Edmonton, Alberta, Canada, former intern at the Boston City Hospital. Sargon may be obtained in Charlottetown from the Hughes Drug Co., Ltd., and H. J. Mabon in Montague.

and then retired into the house to get her hat once more. Deborah was cleaning the table, and she paused for a word with her. 'I'm a heathen, Debby, but I can't heart-the thought of Gorham Lacy. Do you want to go there, old girl?' 'Not me, Miss Mary. But it's as much as my place's worth to say it.' 'But you are going, aren't you?' Deborah stood still with her hands on her hips. 'No Miss Mary, I'm not. How could I in a house with a lot of silly wenches. I couldn't stand their ways nor they mine. I've told the master that.' 'Where will you go, then?' 'Down to Rosebank, Miss Mary, to look after the old missus.' Mary clapped her hands. 'Oh, Debby, that will be an ideal arrangement. Who made it?' 'The master and me, Miss Mary.' 'Does mother know?' 'Not yet, Miss Mary. We'll not be telling her till we done the moving. I'll go to the place and help settle you all, and then, I'll be taking my little holiday.' 'I don't believe you care a fig about leaving us, you hard-hearted old sinner!' said Mary indignantly. 'It'll not be leaving! How could I be leaving, when I'm going to the old missus? There would be nothing but friction in that big house if I went there. I don't know anything about dividing up work, and what would be mine and what other folk's. It would put me clean crazy. There might be even a man-servant. I shouldn't wonder but the missus has not that 'ter sleep. How could I put up with that, do you think? Not me.' 'I'm sure father never would have at this flight of imagination.' 'You wait and see, Miss Mary. It's what the missus wants you'll be 'avin' over there.'

Mary looking very thoughtful, decided against another big ride and proceeded on foot, following the windings of the Fiddle which Granny insulted by calling the barn comparing it with the noble river on whose banks she had been cradled in. She was a deeply religious woman, who put first things first, but she had not been able, after much searching to find a common meeting ground with her English daughter-in-law. Even love for the child had not provided it. She had no shame in being dependent on her son, because the love between them was of that rare kind which forbade the smallest misunderstanding. So when one day she went to him in his office at the mill and said quietly, "Robert" (being a West Country woman she pronounced her son's name as if the vowel in the first syllable were "u" instead of "o") "I want ye to find me a wee horse, a but and ben will do, my lad, but I would like a place to mysel'." The far-back days. She soon came within sight of the little rose-covered cottage where the old lady had found a refuge dear to her heart, and where she was as completely contented as she could be out of her native land. She was absolutely dependent on her only son, and when he decided that she must come to England and make her home with him, she offered no objections. The offer had been made with his wife's full concurrence but the experiment was of a success. There was no quarrel, because old Mrs. Freeland had never in her life quarrelled with anybody. It was not her method of getting what she wanted.
