THRILLING RACE AT TRYON

The residents of Crapaud village were abruptly awakened one morning last week. It appears that two reputable farmers of Tryon started to the creamerie for butter milk. Farmer No. 1 was jogging leisurely along the road, the hour was early, the morning was fine, the birds twittered in the trees. Save for the crowing of an occasional rooster in adjacent barn yards there was nothing to mar the grandeur and beauty of the scene. With visions of a well filled tank of milk in the distance, humming his favorite tune and meditating on the beauties of nature he seemed at peace with all the world, but his mind was soon to be interrupted, for the best laid plans of mice and men gang aft agree. He hears the rumblings of wheels in his rear and Farmer No. 2 comes in sight on the same errand as himself. It is imperative that he get there first. All depend on the speed and endurance of his gallant steed. Number two tries to pass, then throwing down the gauntlet, the factory is a good ten miles away. The race is on, away they go over the bridge, through ruts, down hills. The odds for the first mile and a half seem to be in favor of the big gelding from the point, but as they reach the outskirts of the village the little chestnut mare from the shore seems to possess the greater staying qualities. Pulls up along side and with a terrific burst of speed she leads, the rattling of wagons, the bounding of milk cans, the clatter of two horses' feet on the stony road coupled with the cracking of whips and the shouts of the drivers as they urged their steeds on to greater efforts will not soon be forgotten by the residents of this peaceful hamlet for some time to come. It is not known whether they were going according to national rules but one thing seems sure, that the speed limit was broken and that a new record has been established in the event.

Those who were fortunate enough to see the finish all agree that they would make a flying fox look like a third rater, and make such events as the chariot races in ancient Rome, Paul Revere's ride and the Charge of the Light Brigade pale in insignificance, and the way the respective drivers reined up their panting steeds at the finish would have made Ben Hur green with envy. The vanquished driver arrived in time to see his rival drawing off the cool rich milk with a smile on his face as visions of fat gloopy hogs ran
