MEDIUM SHADES FOR SPRING

There is more talk than usual of medium shades as spring color in imported fabrics illustrate this choice. Imports and models made tendency is such shades as plum copper, oxblood, light orfords. These colors are of great importance in tweed mixtures, and they also assert themselves in trimming detail for the more neutral spring woolens.

Shea, Champion Skater, Turns Professional

LAKE PLACID, N. Y., Dec. 13—Jack Shea, Olympic champion skater and Raymond Stevens, holder of bobsledding records, have turned professional.

Both are residents of this village. They have signed contracts with a tobacco company to endorse a cigarette. Shea was graduated from Dartmouth College last June and expects to study law. His first reason for forsaking the ranks of amateurs, he said, was the general feeling of apathy he held in regard to his particular sport caused by resentment of the recommendation of Avery Brundage, President of the American Olympic committee and the later affirmation by the committee that the A. A. U. send an American Olympic team to Germany.

Shea protested the acceptance of the promises made to Brundage when he visited Germany, as to the treatment to be expected for Jewish athletes on the American teams. She is of Irish descent.

He has won the highest honors in speed skating without defeat in any title match since he entered the senior ranks in 1928.

NOSE BLEED A FAIRLY COMMON OCCURRENCE

Nose bleeding is a fairly common occurrence, which should cause no special alarm in young people. It may be due to a little ulcer inside the nose which does not heal up readily, or, again, one of the tiny veins may have a weak spot, which bleeds readily. If the nose is congested, or if it is blown with violence, there may be considerable bleeding which, however, usually yields to cold compresses with the sufferer lying flat on his back.

Recurrent attacks of nose bleeding in people past their prime may be of more serious import. Those who have a light blood pressure, who are short-necked, or who suffer from bursting, throbbing headaches frequently get attacks of nose bleeding. When the arteries are hardened, as in old people existaxis or nose bleeding frequently acts as a safety valve. It relieves the congestion in the brain and possibly makes the chance of apoplexy more remote.

ACCESSORIES IN FUR

Fur accessories are smart this year. Bags and belts, hats and muffs and ascot come in luxurious as well as inexpensive furs and do their part to turn extremely simple outfits into rather pretentious ensembles. You can dress up a plain coat with a pert shoulder cape of Persian lamb and, with a matching turban, have a costume that looks quite glamorous.

Monument Erected To Memory of Hon Edward Whelan

Recently there was placed in the old Roman Catholic cemetery on Longworth Avenue, Charlottetown, at the grave of the late Hon. Edward Whelan, a memorial to that illustrious Island statesman.

The memorial, provided by the Benevolent Irish Society takes the form of a large slab of imported freestone placed over the grave. This stone is supported by three concrete pillars; on the slab is the following inscription:

Erected by the B.I.S. of Charlottetown to the memory of the Hon. Edward Whelan
One of the Fathers of Confederation and a past President of the Benevolent Irish Society
1824 — 1867

At the corners of the plot are four concrete shafts set upon cruciform bases, and joined by a chain. At the head of the grave, as if in silent vigilance, stands an oak tree planted by Whelans' son in token of the interest taken by his father in things of nature.

The Benevolent Irish Society deserve the commendation of the Province in their patriotic work of perpetuating, in a tangible way the memory of Edward Whelan, a man who played such an important part in the public life of Prince Edward Island and whose chief objective was the welfare of its people.

Tribute to the Hon. Edward Whelan

As one stands in silent contemplation before the monument, recently erected by the Benevolent Irish Society, at the grave of the Hon. Edward Whelan, in the Old Catholic Cemetery on Longworth Avenue, he is carried back to that brilliant address by Whelan, "Eloquence as an Art," when he said, "The Irish people—and it is one of the most beautiful traits in their character—are peculiarly tenacious in cherishing the memory of their great men . . . The dim, religious light' which sheds upon their achievements is far more precious to them than the glare and grandeur of the present hour; and the farther the object to their adoration is removed from them by the lapse of time, the more fervently their affections entwine it . . ." And today, after more than half a century, this "beautiful trait" of his compatriots has not extenuated but rather the memory of Edward Whalen is "far more precious to them than the glare and grandeur of the present hour." Still, is not the glare and grandeur of our present, the achievement of that distinguished man? Our present form of government, our public school system, and our freedom from the curse of absentee landlordism, are the results of his labors.

His public life on Prince Edward Island from the time, as a boy-genius of nineteen years to his untimely death at the comparatively early age of forty-three, was a continual struggle for freedom from the shackles that enslaved our forefathers. A struggle that although fraught with difficulties and discouragements did not deter him from his line of duty. But being motivated by a keen sense of justice, and knowing that he was in a conflict on the side of man's inalienable right he continued unflinchingly, never for a moment relinquishing the trust which his fellowmen had placed in him. There is, however, a concomitant feeling of regret in the realization of his greatness and in the consequent pride we take in his success, in the bitter acknowledgement that little or nothing is known concerning his endeavours. This fact is the more regrettabe when we realize that the channel wherein his fame should be spread is an institution which he unceasingly supported during his life. If our public school curriculum had a place upon it for an intimate study of the lives of our foremost Island statemen such a condition would not exist.

Edward Whelan was an untiring writer, an eloquent orator, and a brilliant statesman. One of his chief weapons was the press, and the power of his pen was seen immediately upon his arrival in his bi-weekly newspaper, "The Palladium." Through its vivid editorials he attacked the current system of land ownership, the abuses that permeated the government, and the social evils that threatened the liberty of the people. However, it was as the greatest orator of his time that he was admired and feared; he was unrivalled upon the lecture platform, the floor of the House and the stage of the lecture room. The relatively few speeches that have been preserved are masterpieces of oratory; they are however, but faint glimpses of the literary mind and intellectual powers he possessed. His position on the question of Confederation—which he did not live to see fulfilled—distinguishes him as a statesman of exceptional foresight and his place among the Fathers of Confederation established him as one of Canada's great men. Of him Thomas D'Arcy McGee, another Irishman of renown, wrote:

Long may thy Island home
Look for thy like to come—
Few may she ever
Find more deserving trust
Freer from thoughts unjust
Than this heart in the dust
At rest—and forever.
