SUPERINTENDENT BATTLE IN CHARGE

It was 10 o'clock on the following morning The sun poured in through the windows of the library, where Superintendent Battle had been at work since 6. On summons from him, George Lomax, Sir Oswald Coote and Jimmy Theisger had just joined him, having repaired the fatigues of the night with a substantial breakfast. Jimmy's arm was in a sling, but he bore little other trace of the night's affray.

The Superintendent eyed all three of them benevolently, somewhat with the air of a kindly curator explaining a museum to little boys. On the table beside him were various objects, neatly labeled. Among them Jimmy recognized Leopold.

"Ah, Superintendent," said George. "I have been anxious to know how you have progressed. Have you caught the man?"

"He'll take a lot of catching, he will," said the Superintendent easily. His failure in that respect did not appear to rankle with him.

George Lomax did not look particularly well pleased. He detested levity of any kind.

"I've got everything taped out pretty clearly," went on the detective. He took up two objects from the table.

"Here we've got the two bullets. The largest is a .455 fired from Mr. Theisger's Colt automatic. Grazed the window sash and I found it embedded in the trunk of that cedar tree. The little fellow was fired from the Mauser .25. After passing through Mr. Theisger's arm, it embedded itself in his armchair here as for the pistol itself—"

MAN WORE GLOVES

"Well?" said Sir Oswald eagerly. "Any fingerprints?"

Battle shook his head. "The man who handled it wore gloves," he said slowly.

"A man who knew his business would wear gloves. Am I right in thinking, Sir Oswald, that you found this pistol just about twenty yards from the bottom of the steps leading up to the terrace?"

"Sir Oswald stopped to the window. "Yes, almost exactly, I should say."

"I don't want to find fault, but it would have been wiser on your part, sir, to leave it exactly as you found it."

"I am sorry," said Sir Oswald stiffly.

"Oh, it doesn't matter. I've been able to reconstruct things. There were your footprints, you see, leading up from the bottom of the garden, and a place where you had obviously stopped and stooped down, and a kind of dent in the grass which was highly suggestive. By the way, what was your theory of the pistol being there?"

"I presumed that it had been dropped by the man in his flight," Battle shook his head.

"Not dropped, Sir Oswald. There are two points against that. To begin with, there is only one set of footprints crossing the lawn just there—your own."

"I see," said Sir Oswald thoughtfully. "Can you be sure of that, Battle?"

"Quite sure, sir. There is one other set of tracks crossing the lawn, Miss Wade's, but they are a good deal farther to the left."

He paused, and then went on: "And there's the dent in the ground. And there's the dent in the ground. The pistol must have struck the ground with some force. It all points to its having been thrown."

"Well, why not?" said Sir Oswald. "Say the man fled down the path to the left. He'd leave no footprints."

"I know dear, I'm just going." Lady Coote withdrew, carrying the empty medicine glass as though it were a goblet out of which she had just administered a death potion.

"Well, Battle," said George Lomax, "it all seems clear enough. Yes, perfectly clear. The man fires a shot, disabling Mr. Theisger, flings away the weapon, runs along the terrace and down the gravel path."

"Where he ought to have been caught by my men," put in Battle. "Your men, if I may say so, Battle, seem to have been singularly remiss. They didn't see Miss Wade come in. If they could miss her coming in, they could easily miss the thief going out."

on the path and he'd hurl the pistol away from him into the middle of the lawn, eh, Lomax?"

George agreed by a nod of the head.

"It's true that he'd leave no footprints on the path," said Battle, "but from the shape of the dent and the way the turf was cut, I don't think the pistol was thrown from that direction. I think it was thrown from the terrace here."

"Very likely," said Sir Oswald. "Does it matter, Superintendent?"

"Ah, yes, Battle," broke in George. "Is it—strictly relevant?"

"Perhaps not (Mr. Lomax. But we like to get things just so, you know. I wonder now if one of you gentlemen would take this pistol and throw it. Will you, Sir Oswald? That's very kind. Stand just there in the window. Now fling it into the middle of the lawn."

"The Superintendent eyed all three of them benevolently, somewhat with the air of a kindly curator explaining a museum to little boys. On the table beside him were various objects, neatly labeled. Among them Jimmy recognized Leopold.

"Can't fool me, Mom—it's Clark's Pea Soup!"

MOM is certainly some cook. Been cooking for our family for twenty years (so Pop says). But when it comes to soup... CLARK'S SOUP!... she says she couldn't make such good soup no matter how she tried (and, if you knew my Mom that's some compliment).

"Miss Crabbe (she's my teacher) says that there is nothing worse than being late for school... well! I wouldn't mind missing school, but gee! I'd hate to miss a plate of this Clark's Pea Soup!" Here is a soup to satisfy a real husky child's appetite. A pure wholesome food... made from big, garden-grown peas... seasoned to a nicety... no adulterants added. Such delicious soup as this could be the only result.

FUNERAL SERVICES OF LATE DOUGLAS DINGWELL

Funeral services for the late Douglas Dingwell were held from his home Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock and were attended by many relatives and friends, both local and those from distant communities. The obsequies were conducted by the Rev. E. L. Baker pastor of the Union Congregational Church.

Mr. Paul Bennett of Arlington, sang Mr. Dingwell's favorite hymn "Lead Kindly Light."

The beautiful floral tributes very fittingly expressed the high regard in which the deceased was held by those who new and loved him.

The bearers were his son Frederick M. Dingwell of New York his nephew, Frederick H. Matthews of Amherst; Harold E. MacInnis, of Malden; and Frederick B. Parker, of Arlington.

Interment in the family lot in Union Cemetery, where the committal service was read by Mr. Baker.

Mortician Jos. E. Trombla was in charge of the preparations and arrangements.
