New "Elizabeth" Play Pageant-Drama Show

LONDON, Oct. 27.—(By the Canadian Press)—"Elizabeth of England," by Ferdinand Bruckner, adapted from the German by Ashley Dukes, British dramatic author, and presented at the Cambridge Theatre, is thus analyzed by The Times theatre critic:

"Herr Bruckner accepts without embarrassment the limits which history puts on the free play of drama. Nothing suggests he would have preferred to illuminate the complex and dazzling personality of England's Elizabeth in a story of his own invention. Rather we feel that if the facts imposed on him by the historian had not existed he would have invented them. Elizabeth stirs his imagination, but so in equal degree does the history of her tragic relations with Essex and of her conflict with Philip of Spain. He has an eye for character, but an even keener eye for the spectacular contrasts that an age of baroque can be made to yield. So, all through the evening, drama struggles with pageantry, and we end by applauding its defeats.

"Not that the drama of this piece is without victories of its own. It takes us triumphantly into the presence of a real woman—no Divine Gloriana hung with the garlands of faded romance—a woman who is dismilitating, pliable, procrastinating, yet admirable and even heroic, as Lytton Strachey insists by virtue of the lengths to which she is carried by all the qualities which every heroine should be without. This victory of the dramatist over the pageant is firmly consolidated by Miss Phyllis Nelson-Terry (Elizabeth of England). She neither spares nor belittles Elizabeth. This Queen is a coquette and has an individual and odious way with the courtiers who take her fancy. She is capable of rating Cecil and Bacon in a voice which grows ever harsher and more masculine as she warms to her work; she lies with superb fluency and falls to cursing on mild provocation; and, tremendous egotist as she may be, you are yet ready to believe that she is a passionate lover of England.

"Essex" played by Leslie Perrins is another of the drama's victories, and Mr. Perrins puts immense skill and vigor into a performance which blends what is boyish and heroic in the character with what is vulgar and showy. The scene in which he seals his doom by crashing into the Queen's only little romantic reserve of self-deception, surprising her in her chamber as her maids are accustomed to see her before she is painted and wigged, is excellent tragedy-comedy. It is as successful as the attempted kidnapping of Elizabeth in her night attire is unsuccessful.

"After this affair has ended, spectacle steadily gains the upper hand, and our interest in the personages of the drama slowly evaporates. Philip of Spain, (played by Matheson Lang) is attending Mass in the Escorial when the chanting of the priests is interrupted by the raucous laughter of Elizabeth presiding over a Privy Council on a higher stage. Matheson Lang's careful study of the wan and wasted bigot dwindles into unimportance, and the costumes of Charles Rickotts, R. A., designer, painter, sculptor and author, a continual delight—share with the groupings of the actors most of our attention. Even more successful, because more moving, is the double scene showing how the news of the Armada's destruction reached the Queen in St. Paul's, and how the same tidings were brought to Philip at his devotions in Spain.

"The play ends with another double scene, in which Philip is dying with muttered bigotries on his lips and a white-haired Elizabeth broods almost tranquilly on her extraordinary past. It is a play which for all its dramatic and spectacular merit, leaves an impression of having been a little dull. The diction which Ashley Dukes has used in his free translation is fluent and formal, but it seems less well suited to the vigorous inconsistencies of the Elizabethan age than it might be to a later and more artificial period, and the characterization of the Cecils and the Bacons and the rest of Elizabeth's servants hardly goes deep enough."

On Tuesday and Wednesday evening of last week a bazaar and supper was held in B. I. S. Hall in aid of St. Marys Church, Souris. Both bazaar and supper were well patronized. The fancy work was very fine and the supper showed that the ladies had not forgotten any of their culinary art.

The work on Souris streets is progressing favorably and at the present time work is going on at the lower end of Main street, which a small portion of has been widened and levelled up. The approach to Souris by the Line Road has been widened as far as the R. C. Chapel; also the road leading from the break water connecting with East Point Road has been fixed up. At present upwards of seventy men are employed. We understand that the erection of a breast work along the Breakwater street water front will be started this week.

The many friends of Miss Mary Poole are pleased to see her back to work in Mathew & MacLeans Ltd. store, after her recent indisposition.

Stubborn Coughs Ended by Recipe, Mixed at Home

Here is the famous old recipe which millions of housewives have found to be the most dependable means of breaking up stubborn coughs due to colds. It takes but a moment to prepare, costs little and saves money, but it gives real relief even for those dreaded coughs that follow severe cold epidemics. From any drugist, get 2½ ounces of Pinex, pour it into a 16 oz. bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup or strained honey. Thus you make 16 ounces of better remedy than you could buy ready-made for three times the cost. It never spoils and tastes so good that even children like it. Not only does this simple mixture soothe the inflamed throat membrane with surprising ease, but also it is absorbed into the blood, and acts directly upon the bronchial tubes, thus aiding the whole system in throwing off the cough. It loosens the germ-laden phlegm and eases chest soreness in a way that is really astonishing. Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of Norway Pine, containing the active agent of creosote, in a refined, palatable form. Nothing known in medicine is more helpful in cases of severe coughs and bronchial irritations. Do not accept a substitute for Pinex. It is guaranteed to give prompt relief or money refunded.
