Guard Them — Those things that money can't buy

"IT is an unpardonable crime" writes Mrs. Ethel Baillie, of Montreal, "to use any other suds than 'Lux,' for the exquisite hand-made woolies, belonging to the "Teenie Weenies;" the soft, dainty shirts, panties, jackets, bootees, etc.

"They represent, besides the expense, many hours of skilful, patient work, done by the loving hands of adoring Grannies, Mothers and Aunties. To risk spoiling these lovely, delicate little garments, by using anything but 'Lux' would be an unpardonable crime, for they cannot be replaced. Money cannot buy what love gives."

There is a lot of good common sense in this letter.

Mrs. Baillie is but one of the millions who has found by experience that when it comes to doing difficult as well as simple work — there is no substitute for Lux.

Sold only in the familiar LUX blue package.

Hole In One

WINNIPEG, Man., Sept. 15.—J. B Quinn, local golfer, probably came close to creating a record in the making of holes in one, here recently. Quinn played a 345 yard hole in one on a local golf course. Local golf authorities state that his feat stands out as the greatest thing of its kind ever accomplished on a golf course.

Quinn made his drive from the tee to the green with a strong wind behind him but it was not until a search around the putting surface for the ball disclosed the fact that the record hole in one had been accomplished.

Origin of Manna

(British United Press.)

JERUSALEM, Sept. 16.—The nature of the Biblical manna is thought to have been established by the Hebrew University expedition under Dr. Bodenheimer, which has just returned from Central Sinai.

The traditional theory was that the Biblical manna was identifiable with the tamariz mannifera, a species of the tamarix shrub which exudes a sugary secretion called manna. It was thought that manna was a natural secretion from the twigs or buds which were pierced by rodent insects.

The expedition has determined that manna is a excretion of the insects themselves, which produce clear syrup-like drops that, if sufficiently abundant, fall to the ground forming whitish grains from the size of a pin's head to the size of a pea.

The quantity of this secretion depends on the rain, but the Bedouin say that in a good season a man can collect about three pounds in a day.

Parents Are Indeed People

As might be expected, it was an astute moving picture publicist who propounded the query: Are parents people? Regardless of its origin, however, the inquiry has a very actual significance.

Few Canadians ever face more important responsibilites than the duties involved in parenthood. Most of us would not think of playing golf, laying a sidewalk or operating a second-hand truck without some careful preparative tuition but we quite blithely assume control over the destinies of members of the next generation with whatever knowledge of the subject we secure by guess or good luck.

By this is not meant purely material matters—food and clothing—but the problems of supervising mental development and the more simple psychological questions which must be met.

It is obviously a very real problem but it is an aspect of education to which educationists have not yet given any considerable attention. What should be taught to parents, how and who should do it are things which still remain to be definitely established.

In Canada, for the past two years, the Canadian Social Hygiene Council has been conducting experiments in parent education. A group of outstanding Canadians—jurists, medical men, educationists and government officials— have considered six of the most important questions on the subject. Their comments, in the form of eight articles, will appear in the Charlottetown Guardian, commencing September 22nd.

Watch for this series. It is one of the unusual and thoroughly interesting features a Canadian newspaper has yet offered its readers.

First Wash In 200 Years

(British United Press.)

LONDON, Sept. 16.—The western wall of the nave of Westminster Abbey is at present a mass of scaffolding, half hiding the brilliant glass of the great window. The reason for this is that the Abbey is being thoroughly cleaned.

Nothing of the kind has been attempted for nearly two hundred years, not, in fact, since the great restoration carried out by Sir Christopher Wren and those who came after him.

That restoration came to an end in 1735, in which year the glass of the window was inserted. It does not display the art of the craftsman in glass at its best, perhaps; but it is intensely interesting. It was carried out by Joshua Price, a noted artist of his day, who strove his best to maintain the old ideals which had come down to him, at a period when he could have received from his eighteenth-century contemporaries but little encouragement. Spectators will be astonished when the work of cleaning is completed at the brilliant and beautiful coloring of Joshua Prince's glass, which will shine like a great mass of jewels.
