Government's Contract With Experts Terminated

OTTAWA, Nov. 12—That the statement issued by Senator Robertson on November 4th, and which declared that the Government's contract with Griffenhagen and associate Civil Service experts had been terminated was absolutely correct was stated this afternoon by Right Hon. Arthur Meighen when asked regarding the rumor that the contract was not actually terminated but was to be renewed later.

Government to Probe Death

NEW YORK, Nov. 15.—Evidence that a ring of bootleggers plotted the death of dry agents who have been strangely murdered in New York and vicinity during the last few months, is in the hands of Department of Justice agents, it was learned today.

If further investigations support the evidence now in hand, arrests may be made shortly.

After the death of one agent named McGinnis, a dinner to celebrate it was said to have been held by the bootleggers. One of the diners is alleged to have remarked that "McGinnis was the only man in the world who had anything on me."

The determination to probe the deaths of agents was one of the outstanding developments in the effort to dry up New York.

Another development was a raid by custom officers on Vincent Astor's yacht just back from a cruise of the West Indies. Liquor was found in the crew's quarters, but friends of Astor declared that he knew nothing of the presence of the liquor there.

GUESTS

When Ida married George they started housekeeping with the idea of entertaining their friends.

"I would like," said George thoughtfully, "to keep open house. Father and mother always have a houseful and it's very pleasant."

"But," objected Ida's cousin, Jess, "entertaining is pretty expensive."

"I would never", intervened Ida stiffly, "think of counting expense when it is a question of hospitality. What we have we will share."

"Think of the pleasure of saying: 'Don't think of going home, old man,' when a rainstorm blows up. 'We'll make you up a bed in no time and you'll eat a real breakfast. Ida will serve crisp slices of bacon and fresh eggs done to a turn.'"

"It sound fine, but food costs so much that you'll find the bills for two quite sufficient," persisted Ida, regardless of the disgusted looks cast in her direction. Where are you going to make up his bed you speak of so gayly?"

"I thought we'd get one of those splendid bed-davenports," said George.

But when they had purchased the necessary furniture for the compact little fold-up flat they found that the purchase of the davenport was cut of the question.

"But," said Ida, who had been shopping. "I found something that will serve. It's a sort of table that folds."

"Large enough for two?"

"No but all right for one. Probably we shan't have more than one to remain over night. There is some wall space in the dining room where we can put it and you can use for your correspondence work evenings, when we're not using it."

The makeshift table was not a desirable addition to the dining room, for the construction was lumpy and the top would not permit George to sit us closely with his knees underneath, it was so solid.

"But," explained Ida a bit abiciously, "it will be splendid as a bed anyway."

The first guest happened to be a wealthy aunt of George's who had hinted at leaving him money. "No I did not expect to remain all night," she replied when they informed her at dinner that they wanted her to stay.

"But we have an extra bed just for guests. I shall be extremely hurt if you go back to the hotel," coaxed Ida, who longed to display her culinary ability.

"Seems rather foolish, for my bill will be just as large. I'm afraid you young people are pretty extravagant," said the aunt.

"Father and mother always entertain—" began George.

"Yes, but they didn't when they began married life," said his relative tartly. "They did light housekeeping in one room for three years until they got enough saved to start in business. You can't expect to begin where your elders leave off."

"She's old and tired," comforted Ida in a whisper when the guest had gone into the bathroom to wash her hands after wiping dishes. "It will be different when our young friends stay."

George's aunt departed next morning in a bad humor. "I never slept on such a bed in my life. Why didn't you give me the bed in the living room?" she asked.

"Why," faltered Ida, "the table bed is single and we need—"

"Never ask me to stay all night again", grumbled the guest. "You mean well, but you are in no circumstances to invite house guests. One naturally expects to be comfortable when an invitation is pressed."

The next guest was an old college friend of George's who was passing through the city on his way west. He called on George at his office and the young benedict gave him a cordial invitation to dine and spend the night. "We've just a tiny place, but it's mighty snug. I've got the best wife in the world," he stated.

Ida happened to be out for the afternoon and her husband was unable to get her on the telephone to apprise her of the company. "I doesn't matter, though," he, assured his friend as they hung to straps on the street car. "We can broil a steak in a jiffy, and Ida simply loves to have me bring my friends home."

Ida had reached home only five minutes previously and had just removed her wet suit and slipped into a coverall apron. It was Monday night and she had chopped the remains of the Sunday dinner into a dainty hash that she had planned to serve on triangles of toast with eggs on top. There was not enough for a third person, and George did not wish to serve hash anyway. "It is fine for us, because, of course, we want to save all we can," he assured her, "but I'll run out and get a steak and some little things. Fred is accustomed to the very best."

So George bought a porterhouse steak that cost $1.90, ice cream and extras that amounted to $2 more, and Ida hurriedly prepared dinner. It was after 8 o'clock before they finished and Ida asked George to take the guest out for a little walk, while she prepared the dining room to serve as guest room also.

The next morning George went out rather diffidently to call Fred. "I hate to disturb you, old man," he said from behind the screen that encircled the table-bed," but we have to get off early and Ida has to come through to get breakfast."

"All right," said Fred sleepily, "I'll tumble out. Seems awful early, though. I didn't sleep until toward morning, and I'm tired."

George, feeling that he had unwarrantably intruded upon his guest's privacy retreated.

The fold-up bed in the living room was made and the room set in its accustomed dainty order. The balcony door stood wide open, letting the fresh lake air blowing through the apartment and the clock struck 7.30 o'clock and there was still no sound from behind the screen.

George called him again and the guest still looked sleepy and disturbed an hour later when the two men went to the car after eating the breakfast that Ida cooked in ten minutes, burning her hand badly through hurrying.

"Thanks for the visit old man," said Fred a little stiffly. "Next time you'd better put me in the living room, so I can sleep on without intruding on your cooking arrangements."

"And Ida," George said that evening, "I have spent a lot of extra money this month entertaining, and it's put you out considerably. It's nice to be hospitable, but I think we'll save awhile first until we have enough to start our house. I thought a place to sleep and a bite of dinner would be appreciated, but—"

"I guess aunt was right," smiled Ida, who looked tired. "We cannot begin where our parents left off and it's silly to try."

ALFRED A BALDWIN

SPRINGFIELD, Missouri, Oct. 17.—Alfred A. Baldwin, one of the founders of the Rogers & Baldwin Hardware company and for many years its president, died suddenly late Saturday night, October 15, at his home 549 St. Louis street, closing peacefully as he had lived, a long and useful life.

Born in 1842.

He was born in Everett, Mass., on October 27, 1841, where he attended the public schools until 16 years old, at which age he went to work in a hardware store in Boston, Mass. Deciding to make this his life's work, by continued study, unusual perserverance and exemplary habits, he acquired such a knowledge of the business that he was invited in 1861 to take an active part in the management of a hardware store in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, Canada.

He eventually acquired control of the store in Charlottetown and until 1883 this was operated under the firm name of A. A. Baldwin & Co.

Desiring to locate in the United States, in which country he had not lost citizenship, he sold the business in Prince Edward Island and returned to Everett, Mass., in 1883, living in the old home place until he could find a suitable location.

Came Here in 1885.

After investigating propositions in several states, Mr. Baldwin joined with W. C. Rogers in the purchase of the Crenshaw Hardware Company, in this city, in February, 1885. Thus started the Rogers & Baldwin Hardware company.

Rogers died in 1900. The business was incorporated as a stock company in 1901, with A. A. Baldwin, president. He later purchased the interests of the Rogers estate.

Mr. Baldwin's life is a fine example of what can be accomplished by perserverance, industry and intergrity. In the same line of business for 66 years always progressing, continually making business friends but never enemies, with an enviable record for honesty and fair dealing, he leaves a gap that it will be difficult to fill.

The family life of the Baldwin family was ideal in every respect, due to a great exent to Mr. Baldwin's thoughtfulness and consideration of others.

The deceased leaves on daughter, Mrs. W. H. Fellows, and three sons, Alfred R. Ernest H. and Winfred M.

Funeral services will be held at the family residence at 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon. Interment will be in Maple Park cemetery.

(The late Mr. Baldwin, formerly conducted business in the building now occupied by T. B. and D. J. Riley. His son and wife visited the Island last summer.)

Don't Shorten Your Lease Of Life

A month's suffering from Dyspepsia or Constipation shortens your life by two months

The stomach is the motor of life—food is the fuel, the stomach is the laboratory where combustion and the resulting changes take place. Therefore, digestion is the indispensable function, the absolute necessity to keep up the "vital fire."

tlo,o'o loothe U t.ws y ETAAO

And trouble of the digestive tract affects the entire organism, and if this trouble is allowed to continue for any length of time it brings on most serious conditions that may often result in death. That is why it can be said without exaggeration that a month's suffering from dyspepsia or constipation shortens your life by fully two months.

If you are suffering from loss of appetite, nausea, pains in the bowels, heartburn, sense of fullness or weight in the stomach or any one of the numerous ills resulting from the poor functioning of the digestive organs, take one or two "Gastronals" after meals.

They will cleanse your system, purify your blood and generally tone your digestive organs. "Gastronal" is a new scientific discovery that is the specific in all troubles of the digestive tract.

It is sold everywhere at 50c, per box or 6 (six) boxes for $2.50. Each box contains 50 Gastronals, each one bearing its own name, so that you get full count. If your dealer cannot supply you, address remittance direct to Dr. J. O. Lambert, Limited, 396 St. Antoine St., Montreal.
