EAGLE ATTACKED NORTH SYDNEY MAN NORTH, SYDNEY, Aug. 2.—A strange combat occurred a few mornings ago at Upper North Sydney. Harry Moore, the well-known milk man, noticing a great commotion amongst his herd of three Ayrshires saw a large dark-colored bird making repeated swoops down among the animals. On hurrying to the spot he discovered a large eagle furiously attacking the head and shoulders of a yearling bull. The animal stood his ground well and tried to butt in to meet each charge of the savage bird, whose cruel beak and talons had left several large gashes in the bull's neck and shoulders.

Mr. Moore, armed only with a milk pail, rushed in to take a hand in the argument, when he was immediately attacked by the eagle, on whom the resounding whacks of the milk pail seemed to have little effect. Mr. Moore might have fared badly from scratches had not his neighbor, Thomas Jackson, made a timely arrival with a stout stake, with which the bird was driven off. Mr. Moore has several of the large quill feathers of the eagle as a memento of his unique experience.
