same house, or we should have continued to live with them. The houses built of sun-dried brick, plastered inside and out with coral lime, the roof being neatly thatched with grass. Ours consists of but one end neatly curtained off for a bed. They look very neat and clean, the plaster being perfectly white. Our friends supplied us with matting for the floor. There is also another house fitted up for Mr. and Mrs. Archibald. We have missionaries all around us; at present they do not allow us to cook for ourselves, but send for us at meal-times. Honolulu is a place of some importance. There are about 600 foreign residents of all countries, but chiefly Americans. There is a great deal of business. The king resides here; he is a fine-looking man and is said to be intelligent. The men in office have a respectable appearance. We spent an evening with a number of young people under the care of Mr. Cooke, with whom they live constantly; they are the children of what may be termed the nobility; the hair apparatus (a young man) is of the number. Some of the young females are very accomplished; they speak English fluently; they also learn music, drawing and all that is taught in our own schools. One of the young ladies, in particular, we noticed as being really elegant—her complexion, though dark, is clear, and her features being good we thought her quite pretty. She interested us very much; we were told she was very amiable. The young men are smart also. The queen has sent us a large mat for our room. The palace is a handsome building. Many of the foreign residents, too, have pretty houses surrounded by trees which walk under them. Here there are cactus plants as large as apple trees at home, with immense leaves and splendid flowers. Several choice geraniums, too, here grow to a great size.

ing, at the start, to make a tour of the churches on behalf of the cause so close to his heart and life, which he did. The writer well recollects hearing him preach on that occasion and noting his striking appearance, like that of a dried mummy from the southern tropic sun.

Other detachments of Bluenose missionaries followed Geddie to the New Hebrides. One of them was a schoolmate of mine, when he was a big fellow and I a tiny shaver, and I remember when sitting on the bench in front of him one day, he was teasing me relentlessly. I crushed him finally, as I thought, with the taunt, "Huh, you are going to be a minister." This was Rev. J. W. McKenzie whom I hoped to have seen passing through Honolulu within the past year, having read that he had retired on account of age.

Another who came close to my young life was Mr. Morrison, who preached in my father's house shortly before leaving for the New Hebrides. The big living room and adjacent apartments were jammed with the congregation and I sat on the doorstep watching the fireflies, yet I recall that I thought the sermon of a very fine one. Its text was in the Song of Solomon, something like this one: "My beloved came into my garden." Also I attended various designation services with my folks

NEW HEBRIDES MISSIONS AND THEIR HISTORY

GO TO NE HEBRIDES.
After seven weeks in Honolulu the Geddies found passage in a vessel bound for the Navigators Islands (Samoa) and on October 17 arrived at Pangopango—written thus phonetically by Patterson. This is not the United States naval station officially called Pago Pago. Geddie had studied the Hawaiian language while in Honolulu, thus putting himself in the way of catching on to conversation in the Polynesian dialects south. He writes that whereas, owing to murders of whites by natives, vessels formerly would not anchor at Tutuila island, now the inhabitants, with few exceptions, had embraced Christianity. At Pangopango they embarked on the missionary vessel John Williams, of the London Missionary Society, on May 27, 1848, for the New Hebrides. They took up their station on Aniiteum.
The story of Geddie's work there is too long even to sketch here. Suffice it to say that when he died in Geelong, where he had been taken when struck down with his last illness in 1872, a beautiful monument to his memory was erected in Geelong cemetery, the inscription on which in Aniiteumese contains this succinct record: "When he landed in 1848 there were no Christians here, and when he left in 1872 there were no heathen."
In 1864-66 Geddie paid a visit to his home country, where he astonished the missionary board by propos-
